The grower or feeder offering sheep for sale often forms a very imperfect estimate of their market value, and chiefly because his contact with the open market has not been sufficient to familiarize him with the factors embodied by the various terms in market reports. It may be that he is ignorant of the meaning of certain terms; he may have a mistaken or hazy notion of others, and both observation and experience show that anything short of a fairly accurate conception of what a certain market term stands for is a source of disappointment and annoyance. Because his judgment as to the true market worth of his sheep is uncertain, the owner may suffer a financial loss in dealing with a local buyer by selling under the market value or by missing a sale by asking too much for them. If, at the time of sale, the owner could definitely determine the value of his sheep, he would experience less difficulty in coming to an early understanding with the local buyer, or in case he shipped them direct to the open market, the chances for disappointment and dissatisfaction would be greatly reduced. While it is the privilege of a few to visit the markets often and there learn the requirements and the demands for the different grades in the various classes, the great majority of sheep owners, and many feeders, must depend largely upon the market reports for such information, and the value of these reports to the man who proposes to buy or sell sheep is determined by the extent to which he can apply them to his particular purchase or sale.

A Prime Native Wether in the Fleece.

Native sheep are those produced—ordinarily in small flocks—on the farms of the central, southern and eastern states. Western sheep are those produced—usually in large bands—on the ranges of the western states. As a rule western sheep have enough merino blood to make them markedly different in appearance from natives which are mostly from mutton-bred parents. But even were they identical in breeding, buyers and salesmen on the market could easily distinguish between them because of differences resulting from the way in which they are fed and managed. On markets where both native and western sheep are received, the daily reports nearly always distinguish between them. While thin natives are often bought up in the country and successfully fed, those that reach the market in low condition do not sell as feeders because they are usually infested with internal parasites, thus making it difficult and in many instances impossible to fatten them.

1. The market classes of sheep are mutton, feeder and breeding sheep. The name of a class indicates the use to which sheep in that class are put.

2. Each class is divided into subclasses and these again into grades. In general the names of the sub-classes suggest differences of either age or sex between sheep put to the same use. The grades refer to differences between the best and the less desirable animals in the various subclasses. In the mutton class these differences are based on quality, form, constitution, condition and weight; and in the breeding class, on age, constitution, form, breeding, quality and condition.

3. Mutton Sheep.—The mutton class includes both native and western sheep. The sub-classes are lambs, yearlings, wethers, ewes, bucks and stags.

Lambs.—About 80 per cent. of the shep sent to slaughter are lambs. The grades are prime, choice, good, medium and common or culls. Quality, condition, form and weight are the factors considered in determining the grade to which lambs belong. Both quality and condition are very important and lambs without high development in both are not placed in the higher grades. Form, especially the feature of paunchiness, is significant in grading lambs. Weight is a factor that varies somewhat with the different times in the year, but lambs weighing 80 pounds and prime in quality, condition and form will always grade as prime.

Yearlings.—Yearlings are used as a substitute for lambs in the meat trade. The grades are prime, choice, good. Prime yearlings are light in weight, immature, and very highly developed in quality and condition.

Wethers.—Only a small percentage of the sheep sent to market are wethers. This percentage is small because both growers and consumers prefer lambs to older sheep. The grades are prime, choice, good, common. Prime wethers have the same requirements in quality and condition as prime yearlings. They may be either light, weighing from 95 to 110 pounds, or heavy, weighing 140 pounds or more.

Ewes.—Ewes do not sell on a par with wethers because they have proportionately a greater amount of offal and a smaller amount of lean meat. The grades are prime, choice, good, medium and common or culls. The requirements in condition, quality and weight are practically the same as for wethers.

Bucks and Stags.—Choice bucks are fat and resemble wethers in form and quality.

4. Feeder Sheep.—Feeder sheep are almost exclusively western sheep. The sub-classes are lambs, yearlings, wethers and ewes.

Lambs.—The grades are fancy selected, choice, good, medium, common. Choice feeder lambs show thrifty condition, a high degree of quality and weigh between 55 and 62 pounds.

The Same Sheep as Shown Above Out of the Fleece.

Wethers.—The grades are choice, good, medium, common. In general the requirements are the same as for yearlings.

Ewes.—The grades are choice, good, medium, and common. Choice feeder ewes are young and choice in quality.

5. Breeding Sheep.—The sub-classes are bucks and ewes.

Ewes.—Breeding ewes are selected from both native and western offerings. The grades are fancy selected, choice, good, common. Choice breeding ewes are from two to four years old, sound, well formed and well bred.

Bucks.—Breeding bucks are not subdivided into grades. All offerings are natives.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE QUACK GRASS PEST

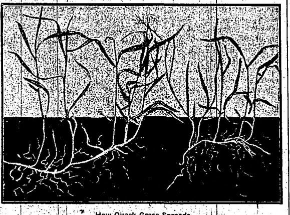
But One Effective Method of Extermination, and That Is to Smother It.

A Wright county (Ia) farmer writes as follows:

"The quarter section south of me is badly infested with quack grass, and on my 20 adjoining there are some fifty patches, each averaging a square rod in area. This I have seeded down and turned into pasture, but there is a half acre of my land next to the road which is a solid mass of quack grass, worse than anything my neighbor has. I want to get rid of this, first, to benefit my own land, and second, as an object lesson to the community. They say here it is impossible to get rid of quack grass, and I have been advised to plow up this half acre in the spring, being careful not to take away any of the roots, and seed it heavily to hemp, the idea being that the rank growth of the hemp would choke out the quack grass. What do you think of this idea?"

Another farmer in Minnesota with a similar trouble writes:

"I have bought a farm in southern Minnesota on which there is more or less quack grass. There is only one small patch on the farm I bought, consisting of about a fourth of an acre. What is your opinion of quack grass, and do you think it is impossible to get rid of it? What do you think of southern Minnesota as a corn country?"



How Quack Grass Spreads.

This opens up the quack grass question, which is becoming a burning question not only in Minnesota and Wisconsin, but in Iowa, especially in northern and central Iowa. The quack grass problem is no problem at all in the semi-arid section, for the reason that it is one of the grasses which stand drouth; and having very good feeding value, it becomes a blessing instead of the curse it is in the humid section.

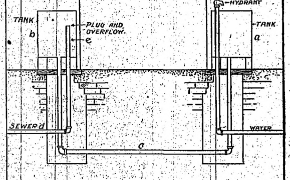
It would be well, therefore, to examine pasture fields early in the spring and ascertain the extent to which they are infested with quack grass. Quack grass comes in just as it did in our correspondent's field, in spots, but speedily spreads over the entire acreage.

Now, as to methods of dealing with it, the Wallace's Farmer suggests that the half acre of the Iowa farmer should have been plowed up before winter set in, and the furrows kinked as much as possible, thus giving them the opportunity of drying out and favoring early pulverization. As it is now, he can select one of two methods: He can let the quack grass grow until it is about ready to head out, in other words, when it is putting forth its supreme effort to produce seed, and then plow it and sow it to buckwheat, or sow it to some rank growing crop such as sorghum, which will completely occupy the ground. Or he can plow it up early in the spring and sow to a rank growing crop. We do not know anything about hemp except that it is a very rank grower and occupies the ground very fully, but if allowed to go to seed it will seed the land and become a weed; but not such a destructive weed as quack grass.

Inasmuch as the land has not been plowed this fall, and inasmuch as it might not be possible to plow it in case of a dry season after the crop of quack grass has been removed and before seeding time, we would suggest that possibly as good a way as any would be either to plow it early, cultivate it as thoroughly as possible, remove as many of the roots as possible, and then sow it to sorghum; or sow it any time to buckwheat after cultivating as above directed, and then in June turn the buckwheat under and sow it to buckwheat again, thus securing a rank growing crop during the entire summer. We have known this last method to be tried with great success in Minnesota on badly infested land, though not in sod.

Bear in mind always that there is but one method of killing quack grass, that of strangulation or smothering it out. If it appears in scattered spots of small area, one of the best ways is to cover it over in the spring with tar paper, keeping the paper on all season. Another method of strangulation is to keep the plants hoed down, so as to keep the leaves from having access to the air. Another method is that suggested by our correspondent, keeping the land covered with a rank growing crop, which is in effect strangulation, or robbing the quack grass shoots of air and sunshine.

Good Watering System for a Stable



In the accompanying plan two galvanized iron tanks two feet by five feet are connected by a pipe (c) so that tank (b) is supplied with water from tank (a), which in turn is supplied from the hydrant as shown. Tank (b) is connected with a sewer by a waste pipe (d). The plug (e) consists of a piece of gas pipe threaded into the end of the waste pipe and therefore answers the purposes of plug and overflow.

Making Butter in Siberia.—A United States consular report states that Danish enterprise has established creameries in central Siberia, on or near the Trans-Siberian railway. It took some time to overcome the stolidity of the Russian peasant, but the creameries and is adding to their number as rapidly as new villages are found where the peasants will agree to deliver milk.

The railroad runs two fast freight trains weekly of 20 refrigerator cars loaded with butter. From a small beginning the business has grown to over $6,000,000. Milk is received from 12,000 peasants, who keep from four to six cows each. It takes five or six Russian sows to furnish as much butter fat as one Danish cow. The whole milk is delivered direct to the creamery.

Poor Mangers.—If horses could speak there would be a general outcry against the mangers in use. Most of them are set too high and are too deep, besides being tight on the bottom instead of slatted to let the dust and hayseed through. Dust is one of the horse's worst enemies, declares Farm Journal, and often injures his breathing apparatus, causing him misery for life. Every manger should have a hay rack in front of it and this should have a slatted bottom. The horse that gets his hay in this manner, pulling it through a rack level with the manger, will not breathe dust and will not have dust in his stall.

Give Them Dust Bath.—Dry soil or road dusts help the hens to keep clear from lice.

"Derned if I know," replied the other. "But whichever is which, I'd rather be the other one."

THE MERRY HA-HA CURE.

Idea All Right—Trouble Is to Get the Prescription Filled.

It is all very well for a German doctor to prescribe hearty laughter as a remedy for nervous diseases, but perhaps he will also be good enough to tell us where we are to get the ingredients for his prescription.

One cannot well sit down and laugh "till the tears run down the cheeks" at nothing at all, however anxious to cure a severe attack of neuralgia.

When one comes to think of it, says the Lady's Pictorial, few things make one laugh to this extent, and what is one person's meat where hilarity is concerned may prove so poisonous to another as to plunge him to the very depths of depression.

There are people who will double up with merriment when they see some one else fall down a flight of steps, and afterward describe it as "the funniest thing they ever saw," but most nervous patients probably would not laugh at all if in order to effect a cure an attempt was made to excite their hilarity by throwing relatives and servants down stairs. Nerve specialists who adopt the laughter cure will have either to practice clowning or keep trained fools to set their patients "in a roar."

CUTS WIDE SWATH IN LONDON SOCIETY

Mrs. James H. Smith, widow of "Silent" Smith, who has entered upon a brilliant social career in London.

London's Cloud.

From the point of view of efforts to dissipate the London fog, an important question is, How high does the fog extend? Dr. William J. Lockyer has recently investigated the subject with the aid of a balloon. The great city being covered with its famous mantle of dusty vapor, he ascended, with friends in the balloon Valkyrie from Battersea. At the height of 2,500 feet they just topped the fog, which from their lofty point of observation appeared as a magnificent sea of cloud. An interesting photograph of London's cloudy double was made from an elevation of 3,000 feet above Bexley heath. On this occasion the fog extended widely over the country round London, and Dr. Lockyer remarks that it is now important to examine from a fog whose lower parts are practically confined to the limits of the city.

The Tsetse's Ancestry.

The little town of Florissant, Colo., became famous in the world of science some thirty years ago, owing to the discovery there of a remarkable number of fossil plants and insects in the Miocene shale rocks. Lately these discoveries have been crowned by the finding of many fossil trees resembling existing species, such as liquidambar, redwood and cottonwood, and of numerous insects. The most interesting of the insects is a tsetse, whose genus is now confined in Africa, where it is the terror of cattle raisers, and the chief agent in spreading the dreaded "sleeping sickness."

Has Saturn Another Ring?

Herr Schaer, of the Geneva, Switzerland, observatory, reports the discovery, in October, of a new dusky ring surrounding the outer border of the bright rings of Saturn. Other observers have since failed to see the alleged new ring, which its discoverer says appeared in the form of two narrow brownish bands projected against the planet and visible beyond its edge. He thinks it is similar to the interior crape ring which borders the bright rings on their inner edge.

MANAGING POULTRY TO GET THE BEST RESULTS

Combined Colony and Brooder House.

[illegible] a thriving and yielding [illegible] in so many styles [illegible] it is difficult to lay [illegible] hard and fast rules. The [illegible] at present is toward cheaper [illegible] and better ventilation. The [illegible] of housing poultry during the winter has not been satisfactory, [illegible] the houses being damp [illegible] in them anything but [illegible] has been quite [illegible] and the results in many [illegible] disappointing.

[illegible] should be so arranged [illegible] to admit plenty of sunlight, [illegible] winter months, as it assists materially in warming the [illegible] making fowls cheery. It [illegible] moisture and is one of the [illegible] agencies for killing microbes and [illegible] germs. Windows should be arranged to come well up under the [illegible]. This will permit the sun to [illegible] well toward the back part of the [illegible]. Winter is the most important time for plenty of sun and [illegible] lower in the heavens during the winter months, hence the importance of having the windows higher. At least one-third of the front of a poultry house should be gabled or open to the south. It should face the south or southeast. Windows should be arranged to slide back or to be removed in some way. On bright mild days no covering is necessary over the opening; on windy or cold stormy days a muslin curtain should be used, unless very cold, when the windows may be kept shut to prevent the combs being frozen. By getting the fowls accustomed to the condition as cold weather approaches they are better prepared to stand lower temperature with no injurious results.

Each bird of the Plymouth Rock, Wyandotte and such breeds requires about nine inches of perch room, Leghorns, etc., about eight inches and Brahmas and Cochins ten inches. Roosts should be made lower or near the floor. Fowls of the heavier breeds cannot fly high, and those of the lighter breeds frequently injure the soles of their feet in jumping from high perches, causing bumblefoot. When dropping boards are used they should be moderately low down to admit easy cleaning. Dropping boards should be made of matched lumber and should be 20 inches wide for one roost and three feet for two, the first being placed ten inches from the wall. Most poultrymen prefer roosts two by three inches wide, with edges rounded slightly. Nests are usually made from 12 to 15 inches square. If placed near the floor they are apt to induce egg eating. Dark nests prevent this.

Cement floors are the cleanest and if properly constructed, and dry and warm and give good results. Six inches of coal cinders rounded well down close with some fine material on top, sand will answer, and one to one and a half inches sand and cement, one cement and two sand will make a strong enough floor for a poultry house.

Colony houses have many things to recommend them. They can be used for several different purposes and be moved from place to place with a horse, insuring fresh land for rearing chicks on. Brooders can be placed in these early in the spring and after the chicks are old enough to do without heat the brooders may be removed and perches put up. This makes an ideal house till very late in the fall. Laying hens can be wintered in colony houses with as good results in egg production as in larger houses. Ventilation can be arranged in colony houses much the same as in larger ones. The two cuts here show the shed roof and gable roof. The shed roof is ventilated by muslin curtains on upper part of windows, the gable roof house by straw loft with lattice in each gable to admit the air to pass over and through the straw, which is held up by wire netting fastened to the sides of the roof.

A muslin curtain was used on upper half of windows shown in figure. On mild days this was hooked up inside during a great portion of the day and was let down during the night. Although the temperature on some nights during the time registered over ten degrees below zero, the combs of the birds were not affected except a Leghorn cockerel which had been purchased and came from a warmer pen. Fowls will stand considerable frost if accustomed to it. The buildings are single boarded.

DRY ROT OF CORN

Disease Which Is Causing Concern.

According to T. J. Burrill and J. T. Barrett of the Illinois station the groups of diseases of corn known under the general name of dry rot has become of sufficient economic importance during the past four or five years to cause general concern among farmers in corn-growing regions.

"In 1906, the year in which there was the greatest amount of dry rot, so far as any records have been made, the loss was 4.5 per cent. of the entire crop in Illinois. This represents a loss of over 15,000,000 bushels, having a value of more than $5,000,000. The loss in 1907 was less than two per cent. of the crop, or about $2,000,000."

The name dry rot is derived from the way the ears are affected in the field. "In general the husks tend to turn prematurely yellow to sooty, and the ear becomes partially or wholly shriveled and much decreased in weight. Sometimes the ears remain upright with the husks closely adhering to them. In other cases the shanks are weakened and the affected ears hang limp from their attachment, or the diseased condition may not be detected until the husk is removed."

There are several kinds of dry rot, due to different causes. The most common and that which, according to Burrill and Barrett, has during the past two seasons caused about 90 per cent. of the damage in Illinois, is due to a fungus known as Diplodia maydis. Ears infected with this fungus "shrivel up more or less, darken in color, and become light in weight.

"The kernels are also shriveled, very brittle, and loosely attached to the cob. The fungus penetrates all portions of the ear, kernels, cob, and husks, and produces many dark-brown, two-celled spores which serve to propagate the fungus.

"There are several other forms of dry rot which are less important, but cause considerable damage, which seems to be on the increase. These are also due to fungi which belong, for the most part, to the genus Fusarium—members of which cause serious damage to quite a number of our important cultivated plants. . . .

"In the case of the Diplodia disease and quite probably in that of the other forms, the fungus perpetuates itself over winter on the old diseased ears and old stalks. It is not usually difficult to find throughout the summer in old corn fields, where the disease has previously prevailed, many pieces of old cornstalks which are infected with the Diplodia fungus. Stalks known to be two years old have been found still producing spores.

"The fungus does not, according to present knowledge, grow upon any other host, and upon developing corn only on the ears. Not so much is known of the other fungi here concerned, but since 90 per cent. of the rot is due to Diplodia, less attention need be given to them. Diseased ears are fruitful sources of subsequent infection and should be removed as promptly as possible. This can be readily done, at the time of husking, if not before. Keep them in a separate receptacle and burn them as soon as practicable. In addition to this, in fields where any considerable amount of disease has been found, the stalks should also have attention, whatever crop is to follow. Something may be gained by carefully plowing them under and leaving them well covered, but burning may be required even if this is otherwise bad procedure. Such a field should not be replanted to corn for at least two years.

"If the first suggestion is always followed and the others are put into practice whenever necessity demands it, these serious losses may be practically prevented."

GRADES OF SHEEP AS KNOWN ON THE MARKET

Information for the Farmer Who Would Market His Sheep Intelligently—By W. C. Coffey, First Asst. in Sheep Husbandry, Illinois.

The grower or feeder offering sheep for sale often forms a very imperfect estimate of their market value, and chiefly because his contact with the open market has not been sufficient to familiarize him with the factors embodied by the various terms in market reports. HOW TO DEAL WITH THE QUACK GRASS PEST

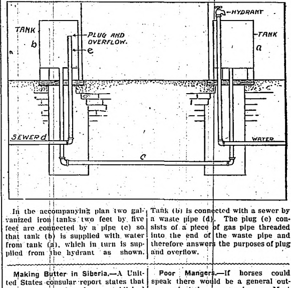
We have known this last method to be tried with great success in Minnesota on badly infested land, though not in sod.

Bear in mind always that there is but one method of killing quack grass, that of strangulation or smothering it out. If it appears in scattered spots of small area, one of the best ways is to cover it over in the spring with tar paper, keeping the paper on all season. Another method of strangulation is to keep the plants hoed down, so as to keep the leaves from having access to the air. Another method is that suggested by our correspondent, keeping the land covered with a rank growing crop, which is in effect strangulation, or robbing the quack grass shoots of air and sunshine.

Good Watering System for a Stable



In the accompanying plan two galvanized iron tanks two feet by five feet are connected by a pipe (c) so that tank (b) is supplied with water from tank (a), which in turn is supplied from the hydrant as shown. Tank (b) is connected with a sewer by a waste pipe (d). The plug (e) consists of a piece of gas pipe threaded into the end of the waste pipe and therefore answers the purposes of plug and overflow.

Making Butter in Siberia.—A United States consular report states that Danish enterprise has established creameries in central Siberia, on or near the Trans-Siberian railway. It took some time to overcome the stolidity of the Russian peasant, but the creameries and is adding to their number as rapidly as new villages are found where the peasants will agree to deliver milk.

The railroad runs two fast freight trains weekly, of 20 refrigerator cars loaded with butter. From a small beginning the business has grown to over $6,000,000. Milk is received from 12,000 peasants, who keep from four to six cows each. It takes five or six Russian sows to furnish as much butter fat as one Danish cow. The whole milk is delivered direct to the creamery.

Poor Mangers.—If horses could speak there would be a general outcry against the mangers in use. Most of them are set too high and are too deep, besides being tight on the bottom instead of slatted to let the dust and hayseed through. Dust is one of the horse's worst enemies, declares Farm Journal, and often injures his breathing apparatus, causing him misery for life. Every manger should have a hay rack in front of it and this should have a slatted bottom. The horse that gets his hay in this manner, pulling it through a rack level with the manger, will not breathe dust and will not have dust in his stall.

Give Them Dust Bath.—Dry soil or road dusts help the hens to keep clear from lice.

Rather Ambiguous.

When Weber and Fields were playing together a couple of husky Western visitors, seeing New York for the first time, dropped into the Weberfield Museum of Drama to see the show.

"Which is Weber, and which is Fields?" asked one, who forgot what a programme was for.

"Derned if I know," replied the other. "But whichever is which, I'd rather be the other one."

Sure of Her Ground.

Mistress—Jane, I saw the milkman kiss you this morning. In the future I will take the milk in.

Jane—'Twouldn't be no use, mum. He's promised never to kiss anybody but me.

Gadzooks, No!

"Marriage is not the uplifting thing it was in the olden days."

"What do you mean?"

"We don't say, 'Marry, come up' any more."

THE MERRY HA-HA CURE.

It is all very well for a German docto to prescribe hearty laughter as a remedy for nervous diseases, but perhaps he will also be good enough to tell us where we are to get the ingredients for his prescription.

One cannot well sit down and laugh "till the tears run down the cheeks" at nothing at all, however anxious to cure a severe attack of neuralgia.

When one comes to think of it, says the Lady's Pictorial, few things make one laugh to this extent, and what is one person's meat where hilarity is concerned may prove so poisonous to another as to plunge him to the very depths of depression.

There are people who will double up with merriment when they see some one else fall down a flight of steps, and afterward describe it as "the funniest thing they ever saw," but most nervous patients probably would not laugh at all if in order to effect a cure an attempt was made to excite their hilarity by throwing relatives and servants down stairs. Nerve specialists who adopt the laughter cure will have either to practice clowning or keep trained fools to set their patients "in a roar."

CUTS WIDE SWATH IN LONDON SOCIETY

Mrs. James H. Smith, widow of "Silent" Smith, who has entered upon a brilliant social career in London.

London's Cloud.

From the point of view of efforts to dissipate the London fog, an important question is, How high does the fog extend? Dr. William J. Lockyer has recently investigated the subject with the aid of a balloon. The great city being covered with its famous mantle of dusty vapor, he ascended, with friends in the balloon Valkyrio from Battersea. At the height of 2,500 feet they just topped the fog, which from their lofty point of observation appeared as a magnificent sea of cloud. An interesting photograph of London's cloudy double was made from an elevation of 3,000 feet above Bexley heath. On this occasion the fog extended widtly over the country round London, and Dr. Lockyer remarks that it is now important to examine from a balloon a fog whose lower parts are practically confined to he limits of he city.

The Tsetse's Ancestry.

The little town of Florissant, Colo., became famous in the world of science some thirty years ago, owing to the discovery there of a remarkable number of fossil plants and insects in the Miocene shale rocks. Lately these discoveries have been continued by the finding of many fossil trees resembling existing species, such as liquidambar, redwood and cotonwood, and of numrous insects. The most interesting of he insects is a tsetse, whose genus is now confined in Africa, where it is the terror of cattle raisers, and the chief agent in spreading the dreaded "sleeping sickness."

Has Saturn Another Ring?

Herr Schaer of the Geneva, Switzerland, observatory reports the discovery, in October, of a new dusky rin gsurrounding the outer border of the bright rings of Saturn. Other observers have since failed to see the alleged new ring, which its discoverer says appeared in the form of two narrow brownish bands projected against the planet, and visible beyond its edge. He thinks it is similar to the interior crape ring, which borders the bright rings on their inner edge.

Soulful Indeed.

"You are going to say something soulful," declared the fiance. "I see it in your lovely eyes."

"What I was going to say is this," responded the fiancee. "Won't you wear a rubber band around your head at nights, so as to train your ears not to stick out?"

Stern Reality.

"What do you think is the real attitude of college men toward frivolous girls?"

"I rather think it is sentimental."

WE regret to report that Julius Schmahl's gubernatorial boom is not thriving on the anti-primary treatment.

THE Northfield News strikes the nail on the head by saying that "if there is any portion of the public school system which needs special encouragement it is the rural school."

THE tonnage tax issue is now before the legislature. The railroads, the brewers and the other special interests are lining up behind the steel trust, and it is easy to predict the outcome. However, the issue is still there.

JOHN W. KERN announces that he has quit politics forever, and in view of all the circumstances no one is going to feel harshly toward Mr. Kern for arriving at this inexorable determination.

PERHAPS the Duluth News-Tribune knew what it was talking about when it said during the campaign that St. Louis county needed a republican governor to back up a republican legislature in order to give the iron interests "a square deal."

THE tariff on lumber and other forest products is a tax on the people for the purpose of hanging up a purse to award the rapid destruction of the forests, says the Hawley Herald. All of which is true, and it is rapidly becoming generally conceded that the whole tariff problem is a business rather than a political problem. When the people look at the proposition with unprejudiced eyes we can hope for a measure of relief.

AT a meeting of the council a resolution was introduced to cancel the franchise of the Northwestern Telephone company, which operates the Fergus Falls telephone exchange. The council at the same time decided to send for an engineer to ascertain the cost of replacing the present system with an up-to-date system, and also to estimate the value of the present plant. The city is considering the advisability of putting in a municipal system.

ST. PAUL and Minneapolis are in the throes of a spirited contest involving the location of the Armour packing plant. Minneapolis is anxious to have the plant at New Brighton, on the property purchased by the Armour company for that purpose, but St. Paul says that an institution of that character and at that place would be a menace to the health and happiness of its people and is endeavoring to have the legislature prohibit the erection of the plant at the proposed location.

THE McIntosh Times has been sold to G. T. Englund of Alexandria, and C. T. Lanman, the former proprieter, expects to find a new location. Mr. Lanman in point of service is one of the oldest editors in northwestern Minnesota and his many newspaper friends will be sorry to learn that he will no longer be "in our midst."

IN a recent speech, William Jennings Bryan expressed a splendid sentiment, devoid of politics, but brimful of good truth, when he said: "I devoted the best of my life to the science of government, but I recognize that no matter how good government may be we miss its blessings if we do not do right as individuals. No matter how we may be absorbed in issues and methods of government, we cannot be indifferent to the many kinds of work to be carried on. I am glad to show my interest in and sympathy with the object of uplifting the individual and advancing the good of the community."

ADOLPH MELZER, a soap manufacturer of Evansville, Ind., and said to be a millionaire, has inserted an ad in the local papers reading as follows: "During the month of February every person who has not the means to provide sufficient feed for his horse or mule can obtain feed from me free of cost. All persons must bring recommendations from some well known citizens." Melzer is a lover of animals, and during the holidays fed hundreds of horses belonging to the needy. "I am a bachelor and have no wife to make my home cheery," he explained. "But I have dogs in my house and horses in my stable, and they take the place of a wife."

OF the destruction of Messina a by-result is the loss of lineage and all traces of family. Many children, too young to know their surnames, or to pronounce them intelligibly, have been rescued, and their names, fortunes, titles, descent and origin have been absolutely cut off. They can tell no more than that they are "Bimbo" or "Bimbina," "Nino" or "Nina." Many are obviously children whom women of rank have borne and loved and nurses tendered. Italians take root in their provincial cities and it often happens that a family has no connections beyond the walls. Even if distant uncles and aunts exist, they cannot recognize children so young. Documents exist to attest the civil standing of many rescued adults, but the young children begin the world without genealogy or rights.

THREE STATESMEN.

From their Lincoln day speeches it is apparent that both President Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan can see very plainly that a parallel may be drawn between Abraham Lincoln and themselves, says the Northfield News. Mr. Roosevelt could not have failed to have it in mind that his hearers would draw the obvious inference when he said:

"Timid and lukewarm people were always denouncing him because he was to extreme; but as a matter of fact he never went to extremes; he worked step by step; and because of this the extremists hated and denounced him with a fervor which now seems to us fantastic in its deification of the unreal and the impossible. He had continually to check those who wished to go forward too fast, at the very time that he overrode the opposition of those who wished not to go forward at all."

No doubt the president, while saying this, was mentally applying it to himself, and had in mind the "timid and lukewarm people" who hate the sight of the big stick. So also with Bryan. He owes all his fame to his gift of oratory, and when he makes a study of Lincoln he sees in him first of all the orator moulding public sentiment. Said he:

"Lincoln's fame as a statesman and as the nation's chief executive in its most crucial period has so overshadowed his fame as an orator that his merits as a public speaker have not been sufficiently emphasized. When it is remembered that his nomination was directly due to the prominence he won upon the stump; that in a remarkable series of debates he held his own against one of the most brilliant orators America has produced; and that to his speeches, more than to the arguments of any other one man, or, in fact, of all other public men combined, was due the success of his party—when all these facts are borne in mind, it will appear plain, even to the casual observer, that too little attention has been given to the extraordinary power which he exercised as a speaker."

We are all of us prone to see those qualities as most admirable in others which we think are specially characteristic of ourselves.

Madison Independent Press: Four more weeks and Roosevelt will go after big game in Africa—having already bagged everything in this country.

Princeton Union: If Mr. Taft has not decided upon his coat of arms, we would suggest that he adopt an 'oppossum rampant and a sweet potato couchant. This would assure him a solid stand-in with the Solid South.

The total value of livestock is $127,021,000, and there are 900 creameries with a value of $4,000,000, while the total value of the crops of 1907 were $157,500,849.

Stillwater Daily Gazette: Peace prevails all over the United States, save and except in Nevada, where hostile demonstrations continue to break out around the mouth. When these eruptions are cured we believe it will be safe to say that throughout this broad land of the free there is peace and quietude in plenty, nothing but a few legislatures disturbing the harmony.

Rochester Bulletin: Though he was billed to speak on Lincoln and did devote a portion of his remarks to the great emancipator, the feature of Lieut. Governor Eberhart's address to the students of Macalaster college last Friday was his prediction that the day of equal suffrage was not far distant. Turning to the co-eds, the lieutenant governor said: "The time will assuredly come, and it is not far distant, when women will have absolutely the same suffrage rights as are now enjoyed by men." This announcement was received with a burst of enthusiastic applause from the young women and the female contingent of the faculty.

Albert Lea Standard: Manitoba owns and operates the telephone system in that country, and the first year, just closed, cleared a profit of $250,000, the result of which is to be reduction of rates from 25 to 40 per cent. That government and also municiple ownership is cheapest and best no longer needs proof. Everybody knows it and admits it, except the corporate owners of franchises—and the grafters.

In sickness, if a certain nerve goes wrong, then the organ that this nerve controls will also surely fail. It may be a stomach nerve, or it may have given strength and support to the heart or kidneys. It was Dr. Shoop that first pointed to this vital truth. Dr. Shoop's Restorative was not made to dose the stomach nor to temporily stimulate the heart or kidneys. That old fashioned method is all wrong. Dr. Shoop's Restorative goes directly to these failing nerves. The remarkable success of this prescription demonstrates the wisdom of treating the actual cause of these failing organs. And it is indeed easy to prove. A simple five or ten days test will surely tell. Try it once and see. Sold by al dealers.

BATTLE IS WON SAYS CASS LAKE

When the Smoke of Battle has Cleared Away "You'll See."

Cass Lake Times: The spoils belong to the finder. This was true in the early days when our great conquering heroes clad in the armor of soldiers marched home with their booty. So shall it continue to be true, and not even the immense wealth of Bemidji nor her slanderous citizens will be able to remove this custom.

Cass Lake found a normal school waiting for some enterprising little city with some enterprising people and believing she was the place for it her soldiers were gathered together and clad with the armor of intelligence and system she started forward. When scarcely on her way an enemy loomed up. This enemy was Bemedji and her soldiers were clad with the armor of wealth and abuse. Bull headed and certain of victory the Bemidjiites darted forward. It was about the fifth time that these warriors attempted to wrestle from Cass Lake something that only intelligent Cass Lake brains seemed to be able to discover.

But in every instance the old custom was adhered to and the spoils were turned over to the finder. First came the memorable battle over the United States land office. This was found by Cass Lake as was the normal waiting for some enterprising city to grapple it. Bemidji hearing of Cass Lake's find made haste to get her soldiers to Washington. The battle was short and the Bemidjiites went home disheartened. They were skinned to a frazzle. Then Bemidji was going to steal Cass Lake's round house and railroad yards. But their memory of bygone days seemed to lead them to believe a battle would be useless and they lost hope and with reluctance laid down their arms. Not long ago a box and crating factory was seen looking this way. Bemidji wanted that, but again her soldiers were defeated. And now with an army claimed to be composed of six thousand souls, and with the combined force of four of her neighboring towns armed to the teeth she is attempting to wrestle the normal from Cass Lake. Bemidji's action would remind us of the lion squealing from the innocent little mouse. They claimed to be a great city, foremost in all life's activities and Cass Lake nothing but a dead little hamlet. And then Bemidji squeals. Ever since the fight began they have been whining and howling. Every move made by Cass Lake has provoked more howls. They were never satisfied. Not even when the peace officials decided to visit the towns of the contesting enemies and ascertain their qualifications. Apparently they were ashamed of their site or ashamed to let the officials visit the little hamlet which they had so misserably misrepresented. However when the officials came, contrary to their desires, they put up a bold front. The mayor greeted them cordially and in their honor clamped the lid on tight. Banquets were given and the officials were shown a great time

Now the fight is practically over. All that remains is to clear away the smoke and the finder will have her spoils.

Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good!! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the difference. No poison marks there! You can always be on the safe side by demanding

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.
CONRAD LOHR,

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

"Just a little tickling in the throat!" Is that what troubles you? But it hangs on! Can't get rid of it! Home remedies don't take hold. Oscar and Herman Lillo were in from their homes out in Deer Park on Saturday last fixing up their bonds for the contract of constructing county ditch No. 34 in the north end of Equality township. They were accompained by J. W. Lynch, J. A. Walker, Miss Ida M. Lillo and August Lillo.

On last Saturday evening C. H. Winship had the misfortune to sustain quite a painful injury by one of his horses stepping on his foot. The sharp calk on the horse shoe cut through the shoe between his toes, completely severing the little toe from its next neighbor and unjointing it so it was simply hanging by the flesh. Dr. Clark fixed up the injured member and Mr. Winship is recovering so rapidly that he is now able to move around in pretty good shape.

INDIGESTION ENDS.

Misery From Your Disordered Stomach Goes in Five Minutes.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of indigestion or dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes belching, dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), biliousness, heartburn, water brash, pain in stomach and intestines or other symptons.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It diagests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance. 19-22

MODERN WAY OF LIVING.

Has a Tendency to Weaken the Strongest.

One hundred years ago there was less kidney trouble than there is today.

The worry, hurry, and overwork of modern living doubles the work of the kidneys, wears and weakens them until unable to properly do their duty of filtering the poisons from the blood. As a result the whole system runs down.

Heed the slightest symptom of kidney trouble—the first backache, the first irregularity of the urine. It may be the forewarning of dangerous disease. You can cure yourself quickly with Doan's Kidney Pills.

Thos. Abbotts, living on Kingston St., Caledonia, Minn., says: "I have suffered for years from kidney trouble. The kidney secretions were so frequent in action that I was compelled to arise many times during the night and I had dull pains in my back and loins. The kidney secretions were highly colored and passed with a burning sensation. At last Doan's Kidney Pills were procured and they corrected the action of my kidneys, relieved the pains in my back and since using them I have felt like a different person. I am glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to other kidney sufferers."

Two men who were putting up ice in the Red Lake river left a hole which they had cut unprotected and a horse belonging to George Ruth, who resides near by, went thru and was drowned. The two men were taken to Crookston and fined $5 and costs each, and it is reported that Mr. Ruth will also sue them for the value of the horse. It is not generally known that leaving a hole in the ice unprotected is a criminal offense but it must be admitted that the law is a good one.

WAS WITH THE BIG SQUADRON

Wm. Pepin Writes Entertainingly of the "Time of His Life."

Wm. Pepin, formerly of this city was with the fleet on the cruise around the world which has just been completed. THE GAZETTE has been permitted to publish extracts from letters Mr. Pepin wrote while on the big jaunt.

Sept. 16, 1908, Albany, Australia.

This is the greatest country on earth. Not so much the country either as its people. They are the most cordial we have met so far. We never felt so important in our lives before. You can make friends with anybody here. They are all flattered if we stop and speak as we meet and none wait for an introduction—they say our stay here is too short for that. Banquets, balls, luncheons, teas, etc., has been our treatment at every stop so far. We got letters from friends in Sydney, New South Wales, on our arrival here and they say that the fleet coming here was the worst thing that ever happened to them—they are all discontented now—all want to be Americans. Our first stop in Australia was Sydney, and that place has the most beautiful harbor in the world. In Melbourne it was their streets. At Melbourne the Catholics of that place gave the Catholics of the fleet a banquet and reception, which was the swellest affair given in honor of the visitors at any port. About five-eighths of the boys making this trip are Catholics. Here in Albany there is nothing great. The only reason we stopped here is to coal ship and we leave tomorrow for Manila. It will take us about 14 days to make this trip. From Manila we go to China and Japan, then back to Manila, then west to good old United States. We have not heard of all the stops we are to make enroute, but we stop in Italy, France and Spain for three anyway. There are 780 men absent without leave from the fleet so far in this place, 42 are from this ship and one out of our band.

Oct. 21, 1908, Yokoma, Japan.

We were given great receptions here and we are all sorry not to be able to understand these "almond-eye" little folks. We are sure they mean well, and don't believe a word the papers say about them wanting to fight Uncle Sam. At least don't worry. These Japanese girls are just like dolls—the cutest dolls we ever saw—but we can't make them "savvy" anything. We leave Oct. 26th, for Manila, for target practice, and will be there about two weeks. Everything here is so different from anything we ever saw before that we would all like to make a longer visit. We went to Tokio with the Nebraska base ball team yesterday and got beat 10 to 0. The Japs are pretty nifty at the game.

Jan. 7, 1909. Port Said, Egypt.

We dated this Jan. 7, 1908, but being written here it should be dated Jan. 7, 1425. Today is their Christmas day, and in five days will be New Year's day, or 1426. We never saw such celebrating as is going on here now. The holidays and the fleet coming together is cause for great rejoicing to them and their idea of keeping Christmas day is worse than any Fourth of July celebration we ever saw in the United States. We left Suez yesterday morning to cross the canal and got here at about 12 o'clock last night.

Jan. 22, 1909. Marseillese, France.

Vive la France!

Arrived here on the 15th, after having had stormy weather and very rough sea. This is the best country thus far. We have just returned to the ship from a 48 hour's liberty and enjoyed every minute of it. These French are the most considerate and polite people we have met. Attended a grand opera here last night and Ted said that although he did not unsdertand a word, it was the best he ever heard. After a week spent here and mingling with its people it has ceased to be matter of wonder to the American Jackies why France should serve as a model of financial skill and the chosen realm of culture, art and fashion.

They say this is our last port of importance, but we have had our fill of travel and have enjoyed every minute of our trip, but it will seem good to get back to our own country once more. Again we say, next to the United States: "Vive la France, la belle France."

Do your CHILDREN ASK QUESTIONS

Of course they do. It is their way of learning and it is your duty to answer. You may need a dictionary to aid you. It won't answer every question, but there are thousands to which it will give you true, clear and definite answers, not about words only, but about things, the sun, men, machinery, places, stories and the like. Then, too, the children can find their own answers. Some of our greatest men have ascribed their power to study of the dictionary.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

In Despair; Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

We must frankly say that we consider it a harmful practice. As the father of a great many babies of all ages, we never rocked on any of them intentionally, and we would probably be arrested if we expressed our full opinion of any woman who would presume to do so.

There are four advantages in taking Munyon's Homeopathic Remedies. First, they are positively harmless. Second, they are pleasant to take. Third, they relieve quickly. Fourth, they cost nothing unless they give satisfaction.

Prof. Munyon has just issued a Magazine-Almanac, which will be sent free to any person who addresses The Munyon Company, Philadelphia.

RURAL TELEPHONES.

The commercial growth of any community irrespective of size is hampered to a degree that cannot be overestimated if telephone service is not at hand. It is essential to all, not only to the millionaire of many business interests, but to the farmer as well. The farmer has been slow to recognize this fact up to within a comparatively short time. But it is becoming apparent to him that it is not an expense, as he has hitherto believed, but a saving, perhaps of a life in illness, perhaps of help, when flood or fire comes or something else.

The great benefits of a telephone to the farming community may be placed under three headings, each heading in itself covering numberless other reasons, namely:

(1) It is one of the greatest time savers ever invented.

(2) Modern business methods would become antique without its use.

(3) It enlivens social intercourse and makes neighbors of and cements friendship between families living miles apart.

A farmer with a 'phone does not have to go to the nearest market to find the price of various agricultural products. Neither is it necessary for him to blindly send his products to market only to find prices at a low level. Reasons too numerous to mention could be given showing what an invaluable assistant the telephone is to the farmer in a business way.

To the town or small city the telephone has become almost as necessary as the lighting supply and water supply. To many, the former is as important as the other two. No city or town can prosper and grow without all three.

To the housewife it is a friend that does not fail. The inconvenience of marketing and shopping is done away with. To her as well as the farmer's wife it is an all around necessity as well as an aid to social enlivenment.—Bemidji Daily Pioneer.

GOOD CHANGE

Coffee to Postum.

The large army of persons who have found relief from many chronic ailments by changing from coffee to Postum as a daily beverage, is growing each day.

It is only a simple question of trying it for oneself in order to know the joy of returning health as realized by an Ills. young lady. She writes:

"I had been a coffee drinker nearly all my life and it affected my stomach—caused insomnia and I was seldom without a headache. I had heard about Postum and how beneficial it was, so concluded to quit coffee and try it.

"I was delighted with the change. I can now sleep well and seldom ever have headache. My stomach has gotten strong and I can eat without suffering afterwards. I think my whole system greatly benefited by Postum.

"My brother also suffered from stomach trouble while he drank coffee, but now, since using Postum he feels so much better he would not go back to coffee for anything."

SOMETHING OF A BLOW

Being the Story of the P. O. Club.

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS

The autumn breeze had been playing hob in the vicinity of Cape Mousam, and when the P. O. club gathered to await the coming of the morning mail they became a more or less natural topic of conversation. It was Uncle Si Peterby who opened the discussion with the remark that it—

"Blowed some last night!"

"Yes," said Bill Peavey, who had just come into town with a barrel of vinegar that was suspiciously popular. "Yes, it blowed a heap up our way. They tell me that up to Skate Holler Jim Perkinses' Br'iled Live Lobster sign was took clean off the verandy of his cafe an' landed halfway up the front o' the Baptist church steeple. They had to call out th' hook an' ladder company to git it down."

"Less see, that's whar the Rev. MacSwattem preaches, ain't it, Bill?" said Peterby.

"Yeh," replied Bill. "He's the feller."

"Don't see no cause for takin' down the sign, then," said Uncle Si. "I heard the Rev. MacSwattem holdin' forth over to the Ingleside camp meetin' one night lass summer, an' he's a br'iler all right. Ye could hear the people sizzlin' afore he got half-way through his firstly."

"Look out thar, Si!" came the postmaster's voice from behind the counter. "It's agin the rules o' this here club to interjeck reeligion into these here acrimonies. As a fed'ral officeholder I can't have this here office o' mine used fer castin' slurs on no American citizens, whatever their previous condition of spirituous servitood. This here office is for the people, of the people and by the people, b'gosh!"

"I wan't makin' no criticisms o' nobody's reeligioon," retorted Uncle Si. "I didn't say them lobsters didn't need br'ilin'. All I says is that such things is the facts."

"Wa-al, it's facts as makes trouble in all kinds of argyments," said the postmaster, "an' I'll thank ye kindly to leave 'em out in the future. Speakin' of the wind, though, they was a feller in here this mornin' that says the brass eagle's been blowed off the town hall up to Hikem Corners, an' is now standin' on his head on top o' Hank Wilbur's hayrick."

"'Taint the first time the 'Merican eagle's been stood on his head under this administration," muttered Uncle Silas, still smarting under the postmaster's rebuke.

"That'll do, Silas Peterby," said the postmaster. "We don't want no offensive part'sanship here, neither. I keep open house here an' within these walls all men is born free and equal in the persoot of life, liberty and politics. If ye want to make invijious remarks about how me an' my friends down to Washin'ton is runnin' this gov'ment ye can go out into the woods an' find a stump to do it on, but I warn ye right here an' now that I ain't goin' to tolerate no seedition in this here grocery."

"All the same, the mail's been fifteen minutes late for five days runnin', an' I got a right as a free born citizen o' this here republic to say what I think of the way your party tends to business," persisted Uncle Silas.

"[illegible] ain't to blame if Jim Yokum's hoss gits a stun in her foot las' Friday, be they?" demanded the postmaster. "[illegible] congress that she's been lame ever since—not as I knows on. I don't remember nothin' in the national platform that accepts reesponsibility for lame animiles injured in the persoot o' duty. Besides, Jim Yokum's a prohybitionist; an' if ye think ye can make a party matter out of it, blame them, not me an' mine."

"Ye hadn't ought to gave him the contrack for carryin' the mails," said Silas.

"He was the lowest bidder," retorted the postmaster.

"Ya-as, an' the slowest driver," said Peterby.

"That ain't none o' my business," said the postmaster. "Besides, we're talkin' about wind, Silas. There's enough of that blowin' around outside without your addin' none to the general supply."

"It never blows around here quite as hard as it used to out in Arizona," said the retired army officer who was sitting on the sugar barrel. "I remember some years ago I was stationed out at Phoenix, and one day one of those desert blasts came hiking across the country, blowing so hard that it lifted an express train bodily off the Santa Fe track and blew it across to the tracks of the Southern Pacific, thirty-five miles away, and before the engineer knew what had happened the train rolled into Tucson as smooth as you please, and bound east instead of west. Fortunately it happened at night, and all the passengers were asleep, or they'd have been a panic on board that train all right."

The postmaster whistled a few bars of "I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark" before venturing upon any comment on the colonel's contribution. Then he threw out the observation that [illegible]

"[illegible] must ha' been quite a [illegible] to them passengers to wake up an' find themselves [illegible] from home. What was you retired for, colonel? Heart failure?"

"No," replied the colonel [illegible]ly. "I was scalped during the Apache campaign."

"Yes," said the colonel. "That is easily explained. You see, I wore a wig."

"Wa-al," put in Bill Peavey at this point, "to come back to blowin', did I ever tell ye how one o' these here October hurricanes saved my life once from a bustin' big black b'ar, back in 1872?"

"Don't know as ye hev," said the postmaster wearily.

"It was the year old Horiss Greeley was runnin' for president," began Bill.

"Wa-al, walkin' or runnin', he was goin' some; but that hain't nothin' to do with the story," said Peavey. "He was a great man, Horiss was, an' he knowed more about farmin' in his little finger than any o' these scientific maggyzine made soil tilers we find yawpin' 'round the country these days teachin' us fellers how to suck eggs. Wa-al, at an yrate, it come around election day, an' I hitched up my team an' done my duty by my country by goin' up to the town hall, votin' for Horiss, an' pairin' off with a half dozen other fellers that was too tired to go to the polls. Then I come home, an' took down that old musket o' mine that I brought home from the war, an' started for the woods. Seein' as how it was a national holiday, I thought I'd go out an' bag a few deer, an' mebbe a brace o' pattridges into the bargain."

"That's why I come here for my dry groceries, Jed," laughed Peavey. "I don't git no green tradin' stamps here, but I do git a fine quality o' white beach sand in my sugar, an' them prunes of yours—"

"We ain't discussin' prunes—not as I knows on," retorted the postmaster, "but if we was I would rise to remark that them prunes ye git here at this emporium is [illegible] they was when ye got 'em afore ye think o' payin' for 'em, [illegible] ye bring in here disguised as strickly fresh eggs."

"Waivin' these here pers'nalities an' comin' back to my story," said Bill, "with my gun in hand I started for the woods back on Mousam mountain, an' pretty soon I got on the trail of a big buck, an' a derned good looker he was, too. Tall and graceful, an' smart as a steel trap. It made my mouth water to look at him, an' he wa'n't only good eatin' neither. He had a pair o' horns settin' on th' top of his head that I knowed on sight I could sell to some summer boarder in need of a hatrack before the next season was over for $13, but if I thought I was goin' to land 'em without no trouble I soon found out my mistake. He was a knowin' old bird."

"That's what I thought he'd turn out afore you got through with him, Bill," grinned the postmaster. "Ain't never no fakin' about you, be there, eh? This here buck o' Bill's, friends and feller citizens, was a bird, an' [illegible] in a half scairt sort o' way an' then flew off an' perched on the top of a pine tree, swayin' in the branches like th' old bobolink he was."

"No, Jed, he didn't do none o' them things," said Peavey. "This here bein' a prohibition state, ye don't see such animiles as the one ye describe around here—that is to say, I don't never see nothin' like that, though I don't deny that you see 'em. What a man sees is his own private business, an' I ain't the kind of a feller to go pokin' my nose into that. This here deer o' mine, gentlemen, was reg'lar—nothin' about him to suggest Jed's cider bar'l, but a reg'lar straightforward buck. He didn't climb no tree, nor disappear down a woodchuck hole chirpin' for his mate to come an' bring him a worm. He just hit it up along his private particular trail the minute his nose told him that I was acomin', an' he kep' amovin' along for four mortal hours without my gettin' him anywhere where I could get a line on him. Meanwhile the sky'd got kind o' clouded over, an' if I'd been thinkin' less about landin' that thar buck an' more of home an' mother I'd ha' knowed there'd be suthin' doin' in the wind line afore long. But ye know how it is—when your mind's sot on one thing all sorts of other things can be happenin' under your very nose an' ye don't take no p'tic'lar notice of 'em. So in spite o' the fact that a big hurricane was comin' up from the sea I kep' on after Mr. Buck. Bimeby the wind come, an', goshtamitey, the way it whistled through them trees would ha' turned the Portland fife corps green with envy, but it didn't have no effect on me. No, sir; not even when I see a couple o' big pine trees right ahead o' me pulled up by the roots an' carried pilkin' away throughthe sky like a pair o' airyplanes with a sheriff after 'em. I wanted that thar buck wind or no wind, an' he knowed it as well as I did. As I said afore he was a knowin' old bird, an' he allers managed to keep out o' range of my gun, or if he was in range he'd fix it so's they was allers a big fat tree trunk or a bowlder of some sort atween us.

"Wa-al, sir, it went on that way, as I says, for four hours," continued Bill, "an' then come about sun down the wind began a-scurryin' through them woods like as if it meant to carry 'em away. The buck wa'n't more'n five rods ahead o' me, the wind blowin' in my direction, when all of a sudden he got behind a big rock, stopped movin' altogether, turned around and, stickin' his head up over the top o' the bowlder, began a-tarin' at me, like as if he was fass-nated by what he saw."

"Wa-al," said Bill, good naturedly, "I ain't never had to offset my lack o' pers'nal beauty with no fed'ral titles. And I ain't sayin' how it come to come about—that thar buck was fass'nated. All I say is that he was fass'nated. I'm tellin' ye the facts. He just stuck his head up over the top o' that rock an' stared—he almost looked like he was laffin'. He turned hisself into a reg'lar target for me, an' I tell ye, I was ready for him. I laid flat down on my stummick to steady my aim, and blazed away square between his eyes. Just as I fired there was another gust of hurricane comin' my way, an' by ginger, boys, the echo o' that there shot o' mine hadn't even begun when I heard a terrible crash an' a blood-curdling groan direckly behind me. Mr. Buck ran crashin' away through the woods. Wa'n't touched at all, just scampered off as fine as ye please. Naterally I turned around to see what the blood-curdlin' groan was about an' 'y' Gorry, there was a big black b'ar, lyin' flat on his back two foot behind me, shot through the forehead, an' dead as a door nail. I could see then what it was that had fass'nated the buck, an' likewise what he was laffin' at, if he was laffin'. He'd seen that thar b'ar comin' for me while I was a huntin' him, an' if it amused him, I ain't sayin' that from his p'int of view it wa'n't funny."

"That's what I'm comin' to," said Peavey. "The fact is, gentlemen, the hurricane that was blowin' at the minute I shot off my gun stopped the shot I'd fired at the buck and blowed 'em back over my head, plunkin' that thar b'ar plum in the face, just about as he was reachin' out to grab me. I found that out when I come to skin him, because I allers make my own shot, an' them that I found buried in that old bruin's brains had my private mark onto 'em."

Just then the mail arrived, and for a while the club was too busy watching its distribution to indulge much comment on Bill Peavey's tale. After the adjournment, however, he and the colonel started up the road together.

"I say, Peavey," said the colonel remorsefully, "that story of mine about those railway trains out in Arizona was just a plain, ordinary, common garden lie. How about yours?"

"I know that, colonel," said Bill with a laugh. "It didn't sound no truer than a railroad map looks, but that thar tale o' mine was true. I can prove it."

"How?" asked the colonel, dubiously.

"History," returned Bill. "You look up the records, colonel, and if ye don't find that Horise Greeley run for president in 1872 I'll ea tmy hat."

"I do like grand opera," exclaimed the lady from Pittsburg, as they listened to the opera in New York. "Who is the composer of this one?"

"So he is in Pittsburg. He's on our baseball team, you know." [illegible]

GREATER THAN NIAGARA.

The Iguazu Waterfalls in South America Leap 213 Feet.

Larger than Niagara is the cataract of the Iguazu falls, almost at the intersection of the three frontiers of Paraguay, Brazil and the Argentine Republic. The river takes its name from a Spanish word meaning great waters.

About twelve miles from its mouth the bed drops suddenly down a rocky perpendicular cliff some 213 feet high, hence there is a waterfall of that great height. At this spot a delightful little island, beautiful with vegetation, divides the river into two arms so that the total width is about two miles and a half. The Brazilian arm of the river forms a tremendous horseshoe here and plunges into a great chasm with a deafening roar, while the arm on the Argentine side spreads out in a sort of amphitheatre form and finishes with one grand leap a litte over 229 feet.

From the Brazilian bank the spectator, at a height of 280 feet, gazes out over two and a half miles of some of the wildest and most fantastic water scenery he can ever hope to see.

Waters stream, seethe, leap, bound, froth and foam, "throwing the sweat of their agony high in the air and writhing, twisting, screaming and moaning, bear off to the Parana." Under the blue vault of the sky this sea of foam, of pearls, of iridescent dust bathes the great background in a shower of beauty that all the more adds to the riot of tropical hues already there. When a high wind is blowing the roar of the cataract can be heard nearly twenty miles away. A rough estimate of the horse-power represented by the falls is 14,000,000.

Few sightseers ever catch a glimpse of the great Iguazu falls, because it takes six days to make the picturesque journey of about 1,250 miles from Buenos Ayres amid the fair fertile plains of Santa Fe and the savage luxuriance of the virgin forest, passing through the territory of the missions and the ruins of the Jesuit churches and convents.

Anticipating Fame.

A young Canadian humorist who went over to England, hoping to find London editors in receptive mood, forwarded a contribution to Punch with this note: "Dear Sir—I arrived in London this morning and paid a visit to Westminster Abbey this afternoon. I found this call depressing, for a man naturally shrinks from inspecting the spot where he is to be buried."

Willing to Take a Chance.

The other evening a particularly woe-begone and souseful looking person stopped James J. Buckley on East Sixth street.

"Gimme a dime for a bed, won't you, mister?" asked the stranger in that half whisper they always use.

Buckley looked at him for a minute thoughtfully. "Well," says he seriously, [illegible]

ONE OF CAPITAL'S BELLES.

Daughter of Belgium Minister Is Partly American.

The eldest daughter of the Belgium minister, Baron Moncheur, will make her debut in Washington this winter. This charming young subject of King Leopold is quite as much American as she is Belge. Her mother, Baron Moncheur's first wife, was a Miss Padelford of Baltimore, one of whose brothers, Edward, married a Mrs. Woolsley and lives in Washington, a near neighbor of his titled brother-in-law; another, the late Arthur Padelford, was the husband of the famous Bettina Girard, whose father was the late Gen. Ordway of Washington.

The Padelfords come of a rich Baltimore family, and this generation has spent with lavish hand the fortune amassed by its founder. They have not, however, dissipated all their patrimony, for Arthur Padelford left at his death a part of the fortune he inherited, and it was bestowed by the courts upon his daughter by Bettina Girard, whom he had disinherited, and since his marriage to Mrs. Woolsley Edward Padelford has led a pious and exemplary life.

The Padelfords are a handsome clan and little Miss Moncheur is a worthy daughter of her house; besides being beautiful, she is extremely graceful and winning with that indefinable charm which the daughters of the south are noted for.

Since her father's marriage to Miss Clayton, Miss Moncheur has passed a greater part of her time with her maternal grandmother in Baltimore, but from now on will remain with her father. Her aunt, Mrs. Edward Padelford, takes the greatest interest in her, and, having no children of her own, is able to do much for the pleasure of her favorite niece.

That is to say, Mrs. Woolsley has no daughters, but she has one son, John Woolsley, familiarly known as "Jack."

Mrs. Newberry's Fine Home.

Mrs. Truman Newberry has many times been described as one of the most attractive women in Washington society. Though the term is frequently used, it seldom has the significance which it possesses in this case. She has been abundantly favored by fate and perhaps the fact that she is a perfectly happy woman has been added to a natural amiability. Her home is in the heart of aristocratic Washington, in Sixteenth street, and was formerly noted in social annals as the residence of Representative George F. Huff of Pennsylvania. The house is admirably adapted for large entertainments and will be ideal for the throngs which resort to cabinet homes during the official receptions. It is thoroughly equipped, filled with rare paintings and vertu and some superb family portraits. Mrs. Newberry is the daughter of the late Gen. Alfred C. Barnes, the veteran publisher of New York city, and she has the fine collection of curios which her parents gathered during many tours in foreign countries. The East Indian ivories are exquisite, as are the numerous miniatures of celebrated Oriental beauties.

Persian Minister's Reception.

Those who are acquainted with the Persian minister to Washington can enjoy a real treat by calling at his "at home" days. Etiquette permits women to drop in on a bachelor minister when that minister is an Oriental of hospitable intentions. Gen. Morteza Khan lives in fine style in the aristocratic West end, and for the present the former Florence Breedon of Boston, now the wife of Mirza Khan, Persian consul general, is acting as hostess in the Persian legation. Reception days are made known by a quaint invitation, sometimes in Persian script and often in verse. Morteza Khan is a man of letters as well as a genial host. The lower floor of the legation is ready for receptions and several Persian students furnish the most alluring music on odd-looking instruments. The refreshments are another attraction. Tea which perfumes the entire room is served in tall silver goblets, and with it comes combined cake and candy made of Persian honey. Conserved fruit and nuts highly spiced and perfumed, with cakes hard as rock, but tasty when one can manage to break off a piece, are eaten with a frozen fruit punch.

Anecdotes of Bismarck.

On the anniversary of the death of Bismarck a collection of anecdotes pertaining to the iron chancellor appeared in Stuttgart, among which are these: After Emperor William I. had returned Bismarck's resignation with the word "Never" written boldly across it, Bismarck spoke again of his failing strength to the emperor. "I am much older than you," said William, "and am still strong enough to ride." "Yes, your majesty," said Bismarck, "the rider usually outlasts the horse." After the peace of 1871, Bismarck went to Frankfort-on-the-Main. When he entered the hotel, where he had often been a guest, the head porter said: "I hardly knew your highness in civilian's clothes." "You are just like the French people," answered Bismarck, "they never know us until we put our uniform on."

Just What Did He Mean?

A saloonist and an anti-saloonist happened to run into the same senator at Washington the other day. Both were anxious to have their views prevail in the matter of liquor legislation for the District, and both were trying to get the senator to express his views on the matter.

The senater smiled and was nice to both, and then he remarked, as he bade them adieu: "You know I have always been a strong believer in putting down drink."

Both the anti and the anti-anti are wondering yet.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

In Despair; Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. We must frankly say that we consider it a harmful practice. As the father of a great many babies of all ages, we never rocked on any of them intentionally, and we would probably be arrested if we expressed our full opinion of any woman who would presume to do so.

There are four advantages in taking Munyon's Homeopathic Remedies. First, they are positively harmless. Second, they are pleasant to take. Third, they relieve quickly. Fourth, they cost nothing unless they give satisfaction.

RURAL TELEPHONES.

The commercial growth of any community irrespective of size is hampered to a degree that cannot be overestimated if telephone service is not at hand. It is essential to all, not only to the millionaire of many business interests, but to the farmer as well. The farmer has been slow to recognize this fact up to within a comparatively short time. But it is becoming apparent to him that it is not an expense, as he has hitherto believed, but a saving, perhaps of a life in illness, perhaps of help, when flood or fire comes or something else.

The great benefits of a telephone to the farming community may be placed under three headings, each heading in itself covering numberless other reasons, namely:

(1) It is one of the greatest time savers ever invented.

(2) Modern business methods would become antique without its use.

(3) It enlivens social intercourse and makes neighbors of and cements friendship between families living miles apart.

A farmer with a 'phone does not have to go to the nearest market to find the price of various agricultural products. Neither is it necessary for him to blindly send his products to market only to find prices at a low level. Reasons too numerous to mention could be given showing what an invaluable assistant the telephone is to the farmer in a business way.

To the town or small city the telephone has become almost as necessary as the lighting supply and water supply. To many, the former is as important as the other two. No city or town can prosper and grow without all three.

To the housewife it is a friend that does not fail. The inconvenience of marketing and shopping is done away with. To her as well as the farmer's wife it is an all around necessity as well as an aid to social enlivenment.—Bemidji Daily Pioneer.

GOOD CHANGE

Coffee to Postum.

The large army of persons who have found relief from many chronic ailments by changing from coffee to Postum as a daily beverage, is growing each day.

It is only a simple question of trying it for oneself in order to know the joy of returning health as realized by an Ills. young lady. She writes:

"I had been a coffee drinker nearly all my life and it affected my stomach—caused insomnia and I was seldom without a headache. I had heard about Postum and how beneficial it was, so concluded to quit coffee and try it.

"I was delighted with the change. I can now sleep well and seldom ever have headache. My stomach has gotten strong and I can eat without suffering afterwards. I think my whole system greatly benefited by Postum.

"My brother also suffered from stomach trouble while he drank coffee, but now, since using Postum he feels so much better he would not go back to coffee for anything."

SOMETHING OF A BLOW

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS

The autumn breeze had been playing hob in the vicinity of Cape Mousam, and when the P. O. club gathered to await the coming of the morning mail they became a more or less natural topic of conversation. It was Uncle Si Peterby who opened the discussion with the remark that it—

"Blowed some last night!"

"Yes," said Bill Peavey, who had just come into town with a barrel of vinegar that was suspiciously popular. "Yes, it blowed a heap up our way. They tell me that up to Skate Holler Jim Perkinses' Br'iled Live Lobster sign was took clean off the verandy of his cafe an' landed halfway up the front o' the Baptist church steeple. They had to call out th' hook an' ladder company to git it down."

"Less see, that's whar the Rev. MacSwattem preaches, ain't it, Bill?" said Peterby.

"Yeh," replied Bill. "He's the feller."

"Don't see no cause for takin' down the sign, then," said Uncle Si. "I heard the Rev. MacSwattem holdin' forth over to the Ingleside camp meetin' one night lass summer, an' he's a br'iler all right. Ye could hear the people sizzlin' afore he got half-way through his firstly."

"Look out thar, Si!" came the postmaster's voice from behind the counter. "It's agin the rules o' this here club to interjeck reeligion into these here acrimonies. As a fed'ral officeholder I can't have this here office o' mine used fer castin' slurs on no American citizens, whatever their previous condition of spirituous servitood. This here office is for the people, of the people and by the people, b'gosh!"

"I wan't makin' no criticisms o' nobody's reeligioon," retorted Uncle Si. "I didn't say them lobsters didn't need br'ilin'. All I says is that such things is the facts."

"Wa-al, it's facts as makes trouble in all kinds of argyments," said the postmaster, "an' I'll thank ye kindly to leave 'em out in the future. Speakin' of the wind, though, they was a feller in here this mornin' that says the brass eagle's been blowed off the town hall up to Hikem Corners, an' is now standin' on his head on top o' Hank Wilbur's hayrick."

"'Taint the first time the 'Merican eagle's been stood on his head under this administration," muttered Uncle Silas, still smarting under the postmaster's rebuke.

"That'll do, Silas Peterby," said the postmaster. "We don't want no offensive part'sanship here, neither. I keep open house here an' within these walls all men is born free and equal in the persoot of life, liberty and politics. If ye want to make invijious remarks about how me an' my friends down to Washin'ton is runnin' this gov'ment ye can go out into the woods an' find a stump to do it on, but I warn ye right here an' now that I ain't goin' to tolerate no seedition in this here grocery."

"All the same, the mail's been fifteen minutes late for five days runnin', an' I got a right as a free born citizen o' this here reepublic to say what I think o' the way your party tends to business," persisted Uncle Silas.

"[illegible] party ain't to blame if Jim Yokum's hoss gits a stun in her foot last Friday, be they?" demanded the postmaster. "'Taint the fault o' congress that she's been lame ever since—not as I knows on. I don't remember nothin' in the national platform that accepts responsibility for lame animiles injured in the persoot o' duty. Besides, Jim Yokum's a prohybitionist; an' if ye think ye can make a party matter out of it, blame them, not me an' mine."

"Ye hadn't ought to gave him the contrack for carryin' the mails," said Silas.

"He was the lowest bidder," retorted the postmaster.

"Ya-as, an' the slowest driver," said Peterby.

"That ain't none o' my business," said the postmaster. "Besides, we're talkin' about wind, Silas. There's enough o' that blowin' around outside without your addin' none to the general supply."

"It never blows around here quite as hard as it used to out in Arizona," said the retired army officer who was sitting on the sugar barrel. "I remember some years ago I was stationed out at Phoenix, and one day one of those desert blasts came hiking across the country, blowing so hard that it lifted an express train bodily off the Santa Fe track and blew it across to the tracks of the Southern Pacific, thirty-five miles away, and before the engineer knew what had happened the train rolled into Tucson as smooth as you please, and bound east instead of west. Fortunately it happened at night, and all the passengers were asleep, or there'd have been a panic on board that train all right."

The postmaster whistled a few bars of "I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark" before venturing upon any comment on the colonel's contribution. Then he threw out the observation that:

"It must ha' been quite a blow to them passengers to wake up an' find theirselves goin' back home agin. What was you retired for, colonel? Heart failure?"

"No," replied the colonel, cheerfully. "I was scalped during the Apache campaign."

"Humph!" ejaculated the postmaster. "Don't seem to have left no scars. Top o' your head's as smooth as a hen's egg."

"Yes," said the colonel. "That is easily explained. You see, I wore a wig."

"Wa-al," put in Bill Peavey at this point, "to come back to blowin', did I ever tell ye how one o' these here October hurricanes saved my life once from a bustin' big black b'ar, back in 1872?"

"Don't know as ye hev," said the postmaster wearily.

"It was the year old Horiss Greeley was runnin' for president," began Bill.

"Walkin', ye mean, don't ye, Bill?" laughed the postmaster.

"Wa-al, walkin' or runnin', he was goin' some; but that hain't nothin' to do with the story," said Peavey. "He was a great man, Horiss was, an' he knowed more about farmin' in his little finger than any o' these scientific maggyzine made soil tilers lwe find yawpin' 'round the country these days teachin' us fellers how to suck eggs. Wa-al, at an yrate, it come around election day, an' I hitched up my team an' done my duty by my country by goin' up to the town hall, votin' for Horiss, an' pairin' off with a half dozen other fellers that was too tired to go to the polls. Then I come home, an' took down that old musket o' mine that I brought home from the war, an' started for the woods. Seein' as how it was a national holiday, I thought I'd go out an' bag a few deer, an' mebbe a brace o' pattridges into the bargain."

"You allers does want suthin' throwed in with what ye git," suggested the postmaster.

"That's why I come here for my dry groceries, Jed," laughed Peavey. "I don't git no green tradin' stamps here, but I do git a fine quality o' white beach sand in my sugar, an' them prunes of yours—"

"We ain't discussin' prunes—not as I knows on," retorted the postmaster, "but if we was I would rise to remark that them prunes ye git here at this emporium is as they was when ye got 'em afore ye think o' payin' for 'em, nobs ye bring in here disguised as strickly fresh eggs."

"Waivin' these here pers'nalities an' comin' back to my story," said Bill, "with my gun in hand I started for the woods back on Mousam mountain, an' pretty soon I got on the trail of a big buck, an' a derned good looker he was, too. Tall and graceful, an' smart as a steel trap. It made my mouth water to look at him, an' he wa'n't only good eatin', neither. He had a pair of horns settin' on th' top of his head that I knowed on sight I could sell to some summer boarder in need of a hatrack before the next season was over for $13, but if I thought I was goin' to land 'em without no trouble I soon found out my mistake. He was a knowin' old bird."

"That's what I thought he'd turn out afore you got through with him, Bill," grinned the postmaster. "Ain't never no fakin' about you, be there, eh? This here buck o' Bill's, friends and feller citizens, was a bird, an' barked in a half scairt sort o' way an' then flew off an' perched on the top of a pine tree, swayin' in the branches, liketh' old bobolink he was."

"No, Jed, he didn't do none o' them things," said Peavey. "This here bein' a prohibition state, ye don't see no such animiles as the one ye describe around here—that is to say, I don't never see nothin' like that, though I don't deny that you see 'em. What a man sees is his own private business, an' I ain't the kind of a feller to go pokin' my nose into that. This here deer o' mine, gentlemen, was reg'lar—nothin' about him to suggest Jed's cider bar'l, but a reg'lar straightforward buck. He didn't climb no tree, nor disappear down a woodchuck hole chirpin' for his mate to come an' bring him a worm. He just hit it up along his private particular trail the minute his nose told him that I was acomin', an' he kep' amovin' along for four mortal hours without my gettin' him anywhere where I could get a line on him. Meanwhile the sky'd got kind o' clouded over, an' if I'd been thinkin' less about landin' that thar buck an' more of home an' mother I'd ha' knowed there'd be suthin' doin' in the wind line afore long. But ye know how it is—when your mind's sot on one thing all sorts of other things can be happenin' under your very nose an' ye don't take no p'tic'lar notice of 'em. So in spite o' the fact that a big hurricane was comin' up from the sea I kep' on after Mr. Buck. Bimeby the wind come, an', goshtamitey, the way it whistled through them trees would ha' turned the Portland fife corps green with envy, but it didn't have no effect on me. No, sir; not even when I see a couple o' big pine trees right ahead o' me pulled up by the roots an' carried pilkin' away throughthe sky like a pair o' airyplanes with a sheriff after 'em. I wanted that thar buck wind or no wind, an' he knowed it as well as I did. As I said afore he was a knowin' old bird, an' he allers managed to keep out o' range of my gun, or if he was in range he'd fix it so's they was allers a big fat tree trunk or a bowlder of some sort atween us.

"Wa-al, sir, it went on that way, as I says, for four hours," continued Bill, "an' then come about sun down the wind began a-scurryin' through them woods like as if it meant to carry 'em away. The buck wa'n't more'n five rods ahead o' me, the wind blowin' in my direction, when all of a sudden he got behind a big rock, stopped movin' altogether, turned around and, stickin' his head up over the top o' the bowlder, began a-tarin' at me, like as if he was fass-nated by what he saw."

"Wa-al," said Bill, good naturedly, "I ain't never had to offset my lack o' pers'nal beauty with no fed'ral titles. And I ain't sayin' how it come to come about that thar buck was fass'nated. All I say is that he was fass'nated. I'm tellin' ye the facts. He just stuck his head up over the top o' that rock an' stared—he almost looked like he was laffin'. He turned hisself into a reg'lar target for me, an' I tell ye, I was ready for him. I laid flat down on my stummick to steady my aim, and blazed away square between his eyes. Just as I fired there was another gust of hurricane comin' my way, an' by ginger, boys, the echo o' that there shot o' mine hadn't even begun when I heard a terrible crash an' a blood-curdling groan directly behind me. Mr. Buck ran crashin' away through the woods. Wa'n't touched at all, just scampered off as fine as ye please. Naterally I turned around to see what the blood-curdlin' groan was about an' 'y' Gorry, there was a big black b'ar, lyin' flat on his back two foot behind me, shot through the forehead, an' dead as a door nail. I could see then what it was that had fass'nated the buck, an' likewise what he was laffin' at, if he was laffin'. He'd seen that thar b'ar comin' for me while I was a huntin' him, an' if it amused him, I ain't sayin' that from his p'int of view it wa'n't funny."

"That's what I'm comin' to," said Peavey. "The fact is, gentlemen, the hurricane that was blowin' at the minute I shot off my gun stopped the shot I'd fired at the buck and blowed 'em back over my head, plunkin' that thar b'ar plum in the face, just about as he was reachin' out to grab me. I found that out when I come to skin him, because I allers make my own shot, an' them that I found buried in that old bruin's brains had my private mark onto 'em."

Just then the mail arrived, and for a while the club was too busy watching its distribution to indulge much comment on Bill Peavey's tale. After the adjournment, however, he and the colonel started up the road together.

"I say, Peavey," said the colonel remorsefully, "that story of mine about those railway trains out in Arizona was just a plain, ordinary, common garden lie. How about yours?"

"I know that, colonel," said Bill with a laugh. "It didn't sound no truer than a railroad map looks, but that thar tale o' mine was true. I can prove it."

"How?" asked the colonel, dubiously.

"History," returned Bill. "You look up the records, colonel, and if ye don't find that Horise Greeley run for president in 1872 I'll ea tmy hat."

GREATER THAN NIAGARA.

About twelve miles from its mouth the bed drops suddenly down a rocky perpendicular cliff some 213 feet high, hence there is a waterfall of that great height. At this spot a delightful little island, beautiful with vegetation, divides the river into two arms so that the total width is about two miles and a half. The Brazilian arm of the river forms a tremendous horseshoe here and plunges into a great chasm with a deafening roar, while the arm on the Argentine side spreads out in a sort of amphitheatre form and finishes with one grand leap a litte over 229 feet.

Below the island the two arms unite and flow on into the Parana River. From the Brazilian bank the spectator, at a height of 280 feet, gazes out over two and a half miles of some of the wildest and most fantastic water scenery he can ever hope to see.

Waters stream, seethe, leap, bound, froth and foam, "throwing the sweat of their agony high in the air and writhing, twisting, screaming and moaning, bear off to the Parana." Under the blue vault of the sky this sea of foam, of pearls, of iridescent dust bathes the great background in a shower of beauty that all the more adds to the riot of tropical hues already there. When a high wind is blowing the roar of the cataract can be heard nearly twenty miles away. A rough estimate of the horse-power represented by the falls is 14,000,000.

Few sightseers ever catch a glimpse of the great Iguazu falls, because it takes six days to make the picturesque journey of about 1,250 miles from Buenos Ayres amid the fair fertile plains of Santa Fe and the savage luxuriance of the virgin forest, passing through the territory of the missions and the ruins of the Jesuit churches and convents.

Anticipating Fame.

A young Canadian humorist who went over to England, hoping to find London editors in receptive mood, forwarded a contribution to Punch with this note: "Dear Sir—I arrived in London this morning and paid a visit to Westminster Abbey this afternoon. I found this call depressing, for a man naturally shrinks from inspecting the spot where he is to be buried."

Willing to Take a Chance.

The other evening a particularly woe-begone and souseful looking person stopped James J. Buckley on East Sixth street.

"Gimme a dime for a bed, won't you, mister?" asked the stranger in that half whisper they always use.

Buckley looked at him for a minute thoughtfully. "Well," says he seriously, "bring the bed around and let me see it. If I think it's worth the price I'll give you a dime for it, of course."

ONE OF CAPITAL'S BELLES.

Daughter of Belgium Minister Is Partly American.

The eldest daughter of the Belgium minister, Baron Moncheur, will make her debut in Washington this winter. This charming young subject of King Leopold is quite as much American as she is Belge. Her mother, Baron Moncheur's first wife, was a Miss Padelford of Baltimore, one of whose brothers, Edward, married a Mrs. Woolsley and lives in Washington, a near neighbor of his titled brother-in-law; another, the late Arthur Padelford, was the husband of the famous Bettina Girard, whose father was the late Gen. Ordway of Washington.

The Padelfords come of a rich Baltimore family, and this generation has spent with lavish hand the fortune amassed by its founder. They have not, however, dissipated all their patrimony, for Arthur Padelford left at his death a part of the fortune he inherited, and it was bestowed by the courts upon his daughter by Bettina Girard, whom he had disinherited, and since his marriage to Mrs. Woolsley Edward Padelford has led a pious and exemplary life.

The Padelfords are a handsome clan and little Miss Moncheur is a worthy daughter of her house; besides being beautiful, she is extremely graceful and winning, with that indefinable charm which the daughters of the south are noted for.

Since her father's marriage to Miss Clayton, Miss Moncheur has passed a greater part of her time with her maternal grandmother in Baltimore, but from now on will remain with her father. Her aunt, Mrs. Edward Padelford, takes the greatest interest in her, and, having no children of her own, is able to do much for the pleasure of her favorite niece.

That is to say, Mrs. Woolsley has no daughters, but she has one son, John Woolsley, familiarly known as "Jack."

Mrs. Newberry's Fine Home.

Mrs. Truman Newberry has many times been described as one of the most attractive women in Washington society. Though the term is frequently used, it seldom has the significance which it possesses in this case. She has been abundantly favored by fate and perhaps the fact that she is a perfectly happy woman has been added to a natural amiability. Her home is in the heart of aristocratic Washington, in Sixteenth street, and was formerly noted in social annals as the residence of Representative George F. Huff of Pennsylvania. The house is admirably adapted for large entertainments and will be ideal for the throngs which resort to cabinet homes during the official receptions. It is thoroughly equipped, filled with rare paintings and vertu and some superb family portraits. Mrs. Newberry is the daughter of the late Gen. Alfred C. Barnes, the veteran publisher of New York city, and she has the fine collection of curios which her parents gathered during many tours in foreign countries. The East Indian ivories are exquisite, as are the numerous miniatures of celebrated Oriental beauties.

Persian Minister's Reception.

Those who are acquainted with the Persian minister to Washington can enjoy a real treat by calling at his "at home" days. Etiquette permits women to drop in on a bachelor minister when that minister is an Oriental of hospitable intentions. Gen. Morteza Khan lives in fine style in the aristocratic West end, and for the present the former Florence Breedon of Boston, now the wife of Mirza Khan, Persian consul general, is acting as hostess in the Persian legation. Reception days are made known by a quaint invitation, sometimes in Persian script and often in verse. Morteza Khan is a man of letters as well as a genial host. The lower floor of the legation is ready for receptions and several Persian students furnish the most alluring music on odd-looking instruments. The refreshments are another attraction. Tea which perfumes the entire room is served in tall silver goblets, and with it comes combined cake and candy made of Persian honey. Conserved fruit and nuts highly spiced and perfumed, with cakes hard as rock, but tasty when one can manage to break off a piece, are eaten with a frozen fruit punch.

Anecdotes of Bismarck.

On the anniversary of the death of Bismarck a collection of anecdotes pertaining to the iron chancellor appeared in Stuttgart, among which are these: After Emperor William I. had returned Bismarck's resignation with the word "Never" written boldly across it, Bismarck spoke again of his failing strength to the emperor. "I am much older than you," said William, "and am still strong enough to ride." "Yes, your majesty," said Bismarck, "the rider usually outlasts the horse." After the peace of 1871, Bismarck went to Frankfort-on-the-Main. When he entered the hotel, where he had often been a guest, the head porter said: "I hardly knew your highness in civilian's clothes." "You are just like the French people," answered Bismarck, "they never know us until we put our uniform on."

Just What Did He Mean?

A saloonist and an anti-saloonist happened to run into the same senator at Washington the other day. Both were anxious to have their views prevail in the matter of liquor legislation for the District, and both were trying to get the senator to express his views on the matter.

The senator smiled and was nice to both, and then he remarked, as he bade them adieu: "You know I have always been a strong believer in putting down drink."

Both the anti and the anti-anti are wondering yet.

Popular Washington Hostess.

Viscountess de Mortel, wife of the first secretary of the French embassy, is giving a number of dances, suppers and musicales to the delight of Washington society folk. The viscountess is one of the most enthusiastic women motorists in Washington, and may be seen almost daily in her big foreign car.

Besides, the chic beauty of the diplomatist's wife is something to see.

Popular in Her Town, Too.

"I love grand opera!" exclaimed the lady from Pittsburg, as they listened to the opera in New York. "Who is the composer of this one?"

"The great Wagner," was her friend's reply. "He's very popular here!"

"So he is in Pittsburg. He's on our baseball team, you know."

Success is the only thing that can turn a man's head when he has a stiff neck.

Fred Big Wind, P. M.

Representative Halvor Steenerson of Minnesota recently made a recommendation for the appointment of a postmaster at Twin Lakes, Minn., which caused a laugh to roll from the seventh to the lower floor of the post-office department. Mr. Steenerson proposed that Star Bad Boy, who has been a "good" boy ever since he has been a federal postmaster, be succeeded for political reasons by Fred Big Wind.

The Berkshire Breed.

The Massachusetts maid was in a romantic mood.

"I am dreaming," she murmured, poetically, "dreaming of the dear old Berkshires of my native state."

"Berkshires?" echoed the Chicago youth, somewhat bewildered. "Er—was your father in the porkraising business?"

And the look that the Massachusetts maid gave him would have congealed radium.

MONEY MADE IN LIVE STOCK IN CENTRAL CANADA.

W. J. Henderson, visiting Seattle, writes the Canadian Government Agent at Spokane, Wash., and says:

"I have neighbors in Central Canada raising wheat, barley and oats for the past 20 years, and are now getting from the same land 20 to 30 bushels of wheat per acre, 40 to 60 bushels of oats.

"It was the first week of May when I got my tent pitched, but the farmers all around had finished putting in their crops, so I only got fifteen acres broke and seeded. They advised me as it was late not to put in much wheat, so I put in five acres of wheat and ten acres oats, one-half acre potatoes and vegetables. All kinds of vegetables grow well up there, sweet corn, tomatoes, onions, carrots, peas, beans, cabbage. My wheat yielded about 20 bushels per acre, for which I got 76 cents, others got 80 cents; oats threshed 35 bushels per acre, for which I got 35 cents per bushel. You see I was three weeks late in getting them in, still I was satisfied.

"From my observation, there is more money made in stock, such as cattle, horses and sheep, as prices are high for such, and it costs nothing to raise them, as horses live the year around out on the grass. In fact, farmers turn their work horses out for the winter, and they come in fresh and fat in the spring. Cattle live out seven or eight months. They mow the prairie grass and stack it for winter and give oat straw. My neighbors sold steers at $40 each, and any kind of a horse that can plow, from $150.00 up. I raised 60 chickens and 5 pigs, as pork, chickens, butter and eggs pay well and always a good market for anything a man raises, so I have every reason to be thankful, besides, at the end of three years I get my patent for homestead. I heard of no homestead selling for less than $2,000, so where under the sun could an old man or young man do better?"

THE WIDOW

Tells Bachelor How to Be Good When Alone Without Being Lonesome.

BY HELEN ROWLAND.

"Good-by!" sighed the bachelor, as he deposited two handbags, one golf case, one silk ulster, one umbrella, a bunch of violets, four pounds of Huyler's and the widow on various seats in the Grand Central station. "If you WILL GO—be a good little girl and have a good time."

"Which?" inquired the widow, glancing up archly under her ermine toque. "I can't do both, you know," she added plaintively. "It's just like a man to tell a woman to go out and swim without going near the water!"

"Oh, well," retorted the bachelor, sinking wearily into a seat beside her, "hang your morals on a hickory limb if you want to. Don't mind ME!"

"But I don't want to," pouted the widow, "and I DO mind you. If we women didn't mind you men we'd all be as good as gold and as sweet and simple as sugar candy."

"What!" exclaimed the bachelor in shocked amazement.

"From the time you are old enough to teach us to climb fences," explained the widow calmly, "and steal apples, and kill bugs, and play tick-tack, you make it clear to us that those things are attractive and that 'good little girls' always get left out of the game."

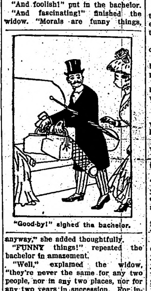
"Certainly!" agreed the bachelor promptly. "When we want to play, we want a playmate, but when we want a wife—"

"You want a miracle!" broke in the widow. "A peerless paragon who can cook your meals with one hand while she leads you straight to heaven wih the other. But I'm not talking about he 'perfect being' you are going to marry, but about the girl who isn't married and who wants to have a good time. How is she going to do it and live up to your ideals? It's easy enough to be good," she added with a sigh, "but it's pretty hard to be lonesome."

"I'm not!" broke in the widow indignantly. "I don't want to BE worldly; I only want to SEEM worldly—in order to be attractive. We women are all born with orange marmalade tastes, and it's only because we find that you men prefer caviare and spice to marmalade and tea that we try to be caviare—"

"And foolish!" put in the bachelor.

"And fascinating!" finished the widow. "Morals are funny things, anyway," she added thoughtfully.



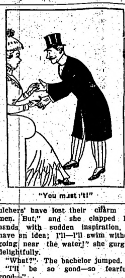
"Good-by!" sighed the bachelor.

"FUNNY things!" repeated the bachelor in amazement.

"Well," explained the widow, "they're never the same for any two people, nor in any two places, nor for any two years in succession. For instance, it's immoral down at Pottsown corners to curl your front hair and wear violet silk petticoats and a hat tha turns up at the sides and to play cards and dance round dances—and it's almost immoral NOT to do those things in New York or at Newport. A lady who gambled at bridge and wore a sheath gown twenty years ago would have been excluded from polite society, but nowadays she's excluded from society if she doesn't. After all, being good is only keeping up with the styles," and the widow sighed.

"The fashions in feminine morals have changed in the last few years!" admitted the bachelor sadly.

"Of course," agreed the widow cheerfully. "It used to be stylish to wear your morals on the outside and play the sins, but now it's fashionable to wear them on hte inside and play the sinner. Women are just as good as they ever were, only 'whited sepulchers' have lost their charm for men. But," and she clapped her hands with sudden inspiration, "I have an idea; I'll—I'll swim without going near the water!" she gurgled delightfully.



"You mustn't!"

"What?" The bachelor jumped.

"I'll be so good—so fearfully good—"

"That's right!" commented the bachelor approvingly.

"—that people will think I'm trying to hide something! And so proper that I'll rouse suspicion and—"

"Go on," growled the bachelor.

"—and so prim and quiet that they'll think I've a past! Then I'll be interesting!" and the widow glanced up triumphantly.

"I hope you'll have a nice time!" commented the bachelor, dryly.

"Why, I thought you wanted me to be good!" exclaimed the widow in reproachful surprise.

"I've changed my mind," replied the bachelor firmly. "I want you to be very wicked.—"

"Mr. Travers!"

"And worldly and broad-minded. I want you to hang your scruples on a hickory limb this minute—"

"It wouldn't hold them," gasped the widow.

"And kiss me good-by!" and he bent toward her suddenly.

"Stop! Stop!" cried the widow. "You mustn't, and it is n't right—and you're turning my scruples wrong side out and mussing my hair all up, and—"

"There!" said the bachelor, releasing her with a sigh of satisfacion. "And now what can I do—for you?"

"You can do the most difficult thing on earth," replied the widow, readjusting her ruffled feathers with injured dignity; "for any man to do when—when the woman he—he cares for is out of sight!"

"Are you going to ask me to be good?" cried the bachelor in alarm.

"No," sighed the widow, "that would be too much! But, Billy, dear—won't you try to be a little lonesome?"

MANY CURTAIN CALLS MAKES PRINCESS CRY

PRINCESS RAJAH AT HAMMERSTEINS VICTORIA THEATRE

When the Princess Rajah made her Broadway vaudeville debu in Hammerstein's theater in New York she created something of a sensation. In the afternoon she received so many curtain calls that she was overcome with emotion and cried, so the manager said. At night fifteen curtain calls were counted.

The young woman gives a "dance de Cleopatra," with scenic embellishments showing Egyptian temples and the Nile, meanwhile playing hide and seek with a sure-enough snake. The dance lasts for fully fifteen minutes.

We'll gladly cuss, quarrel, fight or just merely "jaw" with you.

Kills Eight Hundred Snakes a Year.

Few of India's "Rikkie Tikki Tavies" have such a record in snake killing as that of Leon Casse, known as Pere la Vipere, who kills vipers in the forest of Fontainebleau. He has just been taking a rest after an arduous season during which he has killed nearly 700 snakes. His average for a year is about 800.

He sleeps on a mattress made of viper skins, and it is said that he has been bitten so many times that he no longer suffers.

Unnecessary Noises.

The celebrated soprano was in the middle of her solo when little Johnny said to his mother, referring to the conductor of the orchestra, "Why does that man hit at the woman with his stick?"

"He is not hitting at her," replied his mother. "Keep quiet."

"Well, then, what is she hollerin' so for?"

Goats the Fashion Now.

The keeping of show goats is now very fashionable in England, and no wonder, for the animals are both useful and ornamental. They are pleasant pets if well kept, and a big billygoat is as strong as a pony and can draw a considerable weight. Showing them at dairy and agricultural shows is a profitable business. A great many well known ladies go in for this fancy; some being also known in the doggy world.

Suiting Him.

"Say, boss, where am I?" asked the recently deceased negro, as he woke up.

"You're in heaven," remarked the attendant.

"Dat so? Den where's mah wings and harp?"

"Glory, glory!"

ARE SEEN NO MORE

NATIONAL CAPITAL FREED FRON OFFICE SEEKERS.

Men with "Expectations" Have Ceased to Flock to Washington, Though the Old Belief Is Hard to Down.

"You'll have observed that there's the same old talk about the horde of office seekers who will be swooping upon Washington when Mr. Taft takes up the reins of government," said an old time capitol official. "It's hard to down such impressions.

"As a matter of fact the office seeker as a type is as extinct in Washington as the dodo. Not only is Washington not swooped upon with office seekers even at the outset of a new administration any more, but the present generation of Washingtonians hardly know what the old time type of office seeker in Washington looked like.

"Office seekers used to swarm here by the thousands and go dead broke while waiting for the office that never came and camp out on the park benches at the finish, and all that sort of dead and gone thing, but that is ancient history.

"There are people coming here all the time from all parts of the country to take jobs in the government employ, but they're not office seekers of the type that existed before the civil service law. They're office getters. They've got their billets before they get here. They've passed their examinations, got their rating papers, and most of them their appointments, before ever setting foot in Washington.

"Once in a while when a man has passed a particularly good examination, with an unusual percentage, he comes on to Washington before actually receiving an appointment, having excellent reason to expect that the appointment will be forthcoming in due time. Most of these people, too, look around for something to do on the outside while waiting for their government appointments to materialize.

"They don't haunt the corridors of the departments or clamor at the doors of officials and legislators, nor sit around hotel lobbies telling their woes, because they know just where they stand, have no woes and are in general just as different from the old time typical officeseeker as I am from a Papuan.

"Even when the administration changes there are no longer any clamorous crowds here looking for the higher appointive and unclassified offices—professional place hunters, that is. Men engaged in business or the professions come here, it is true, at the request of their senators or representatives when administrations change to be introduced to the new president and to have their applications considered, but after a visit or so at the White House these men quickly go back to their homes."

DANISH BABY'S LONG VEIL.

Son of Count von Moltke Wears Picturesque Garb of His Fatherland.

There is no more picturesque figure in Washington than the baby son of Countess von Moltke, wife of the Danish minister. Before her marriage she was Cornelia Van Rensselaer Thayer of Boston. Her son was born since the minister's appointment to his present post, and it is only within the last few days that the countess herself has come to Washington to take her place as one of the statellest American women who have come back to their native shores to preside over a foreign home. The baby boy draws eyes every fine afternoon in Dupont park. He is arrayed after the fine fashion of all aristocratic Danish infants, and a conspicuous feature of his attire is a beautifully embroidered lace veil at least six feet long.

This veil is made fast to the front of the von Moltke baby's cap and it is spread carefully over his face and tiny body when he is in his perambulator. When he is at home it is raised and lifted to one side, much after the fashion in which women lay back their automobile veils when they leave their cars. The baby's nurse is an equally interesting figure. She is a big woman from the shores of the North sea and she wears the elaborate national headdress of her countrywomen. Her earrings, however, attract most attention. They are made of fretted gold and are as big around as the bottom of an ordinary teacup. From the rims, hung close together, depend strings of tiny pearls in settings of filigree gold. It is asserted the nurse has received offers of fancy prices for her earrings from more than one society belle, but she steadily refuses to part with them.

Colleges Hunting Ideas.

The students of both Cornell and Chicago are struggling now with problems very much the same. At Chicago the senior council is trying to get a motto for the university. Not only have the present students submitted suggestions but graduates are taking part in the competition.

At Cornell the faculty wants to get a new emblem, to be used for letterheads, programs, embroideries, pins, stained glass and the like. The new emblem is not to replace the present as an official seal. The design is to leave out the portrait of Ezra Cornell and the long motto, leaving only "Cornell."

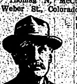
Reduction in Taxes for Large Families.

We joke in this country over the question of imposing a tax on bachelors, but in Germany they have taken the matter seriously. At least that is what a new scheme being introduced next year will really come to. At present in Germany the tax on an income of £325 is about £15.

Next year this sum will be reduced in the case of the taxpayer who has two children, with further reductions for larger families. Relatives for whose support a taxpayer is legally responsible will be considered as children.—London Chronicle.

BROKEN REST.

A Back That Aches All Day Disturbs Sleep at Night.



Thomas N. McCullough, 321 So. Weber St., Colorado Springs, Colo., says: "Attacks of backache and kidney trouble began to come on me, lasting often for three weeks at a time, and I would be unable to turn in bed. The urine was much disordered, containing sediment, and my rest was broken at night. Relief from these troubles came soon after I started taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and continued treatment entirely freed me from kidney trouble. The cure has been permanent."

THE PERUNA ALMANAC.

The druggists have already been supplied with the Peruna almanac for 1909. Most everybody has a hobby. Automobiles is V. M. Higinbotham's hobby and he rides it. Hig is the owner, proprietor and propeller of five automobiles. Several automobile manufacturing concerns, learning of Hig's failing for the buz wagons, have been flooding his mail with propositions to sell him automobiles in carload lots, train load lots, any old way. Their importunities have driven Hig to desperation and he has replied to their propositions in characteristic manner. Some of his letters have come into the hands of friends in town and are very much enjoyed. They are examples of purest English as she is writ—sometimes.

Rev. Philip A. Schwarz, Jr., pastor of the Presbyterian church, sent to the Minnesota Endeavor News the program of the special Christian Endeavor Day services held at the church recently. The News printed the program in full, commenting favorably upon its arrangement and upon the work of the local society and the pastor. The following criticism was made of the typographical work on the program which was a product of the job printing department of THE GAZETTE: "We wish we had space in which to reproduce the extremely neat, four page folder, printed in two colors, which is entirely devoted to the program of the special service. It is most attractive typographically and furnishes a fine example of how much may be added to the effectiveness of any special meeting by the use of good printed matter."

Blaze Last Night.

At 3:30 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the building used by Attorney Chas. E. Boughton as a gar—livery barn for his automobile. The firemen got on the ground in a hurry, considering the hour at which they were called out, and extinguished the fire before the building and machine were consumed, but the automobile is ruined and what remains of the building is of little value. Spontaneous combustion, brought about by reason of oily waste used in cleaning the machine being left in the building, is thought to have caused the fire. The loss is covered by insurance.

New Legislative District.

The first reapportionment measure in the senate appeared yesterday under the name of A L. Hanson who would establish the Sixty-fourth district. This will include Beltrami and Red Lake counties, which are now included with Norman, Clearwater and Mahnomen counties in the Sixty-first district. Each district is to have one senator and there are to be two representatives from the Sixty-first district, and one from the new district.

BUILDING PHONE LINE

They stated that they were meeting with excellent success in disposing of the stock, that they expect to construct fifty miles of line during the coming season and that the line would give phone service to people much in need of the accommodation.

CASS LAKE WINS FIRST ROUND

Gains Lead in Fight for Location of Proposed Sixth Normal.

Bills Out of the Committee—Interesting Fight on in the House.

Cass Lake won the first round Monday in the fight for the location at the proposed sixth normal school, and it is said to have been the hottest fight of the session of the legislature. The committee had approved the general bill, known as the Hinds bill, covering all of the proposed locations and recommended for defeat all other bills including the Cass Lake bill, known as McGarry bill. However Representative McGarry offered a minority report, putting his bill on general orders, and it was adopted, 60 to 57. Afterward the house put the Hinds bill on general orders by a vote of 62 to 54, so the fight is yet to be made between the Cass Lake bill and the general bill. All the candidates for the school joined in the general bill, and the field is against Cass Lake. Both bills are now before the house, and while the odds are with Cass Lake, owing to the showing made in Tuesday's vote, the fight is not yet won.

Bank Guaranty Plan.

A state bank deposit guaranty plan is provided in a bill offered in the senate this by weeks Senator A. L. Hanson of Ada. Banks are divided into classes, A and B, the former in cities under 50,000 and the latter in cities over 50,000. Deposits are limited to ten times the capital and surplus in Class A, and eight times in Class B. Class A banks are to pay into the guaranty fund one-tenth of one per cent, and Class B one-fifth of one per cent, and out of that fund depositors in failed banks are to be re-imbursed.

REV. SCHWARZ RESIGNS

Pastor of Presbyterian Church Offers Resignation to Take Effect April 1.

Following the morning services at the Presbyterian church last Sunday, Rev. Philip A. Schwarz, jr. read his resignation as pastor to take effect April 1. Mr. Schwarz gave as his reason for the action that he had been considering since last November an urgent call to the pastorate of a church in a larger field of labor and that he desired to be free to accept the call. Following the service next Sunday morning there will be a meeting of the congregation to take action regarding the resignation. Mr. Schwarz has many friends in Red Lake Falls not limited to the members of his church and congregation, who regret that he contemplates leaving.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

Camp for Consumptives on Island in Lake-of-the Woods.

An organization known as the "Lake-of-the Woods White Cross Association" will have for its object the establishment of a free "camp" on one of the many thousand islands in the Lake-of-the-Woods to which reputed physicians may send for stated lengths of time persons that may be threatened with tuberculosis or in the initial stages of that disease and are not able to sustain themselves under other circumstances a sufficient length of time to secure lasting benefits.

The plan is to purchase an island, partially clear it and erect small "cottages" that will practically compel the occupants to live outside by their having but little or no inside. As patients will be required to provide for their own sustenance a very large amount is not required, comparatively, to put the "camp" into working order.

Crookston people are back of the movement and hope to finance the project by means of a "chain letter," an overworked though often an effective means of raising money.

Never.

"Are there depths," moaned the pessimist, "to which human depravity will not sink?"

"There are," responded the optimist firmly. "I never knew a man to root habitually against the home team."

A Novelty.

"I'm tired of honest blacksmiths," sneered the critic.

"Then you'll appreciate my new melodrama," said the playwright. "Its hero is an upright piano mover."

The Next Plea.

"Now, Miss Floradora, why did you shoot the man?"

"Because."

"That's our case, gentlemen of the jury."

A Common Predicament.

"People seem to think I'm a fraud," complained the fairy queen. "But it's no wonder. Times are hard, and here I am wearing a made-over gown."

Advantages and Disadvantages.

Asbestos whiskers, it is clear, would save a lot of folks from being scorched; but then I fear they'd spoil a lot of jokes.

COUNTY WILL BUILD STATE HIGHWAYS

Commissioners Apply to State for Allotment of $2,250—Will Spend $10,000.

County Must Spend Three Times as Much as Allotment.

At the last meeting of the county commissioners it was voted to apply to the state for an allotment from the state aid fund in the amount of $2,250 to be expended for permanent improvements on state roads in the county. If the sum asked for is granted, the county will be required to expend three times as much, all of which must be expended on designated state roads under the rules and regulations of the state highway commission.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour raisings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion. 23-26

SENT TO REFORMATORY

Thief River Falls Boy "Up" For Attempting to Commit Burglary.

Chas. Carpenter, a young man eighteen years old, residing at Thief River Falls, broke into Ole Rude's store at Thief River last Friday night. He was caught while apparently attempting to profit financially by his wrong doing. He was arraigned in municipal court the next day charged with attempting to commit a crime. At first he waived examination, but later plead guilty. He was brought to this city and confined in the county jail until last evening when he was taken to Crookston. This morning he was sentenced by Judge Watts to an indeterminate term in the reformatory. He was brought to Red Lake Falls this morning and this evening will be taken to the reformatory by Sheriff Nelson.

BOOSTERS' ORGANIZATION SURE THING

Social Club will be Incoporated With More Than Fifty Members.

Will Fit Up Fine Quarters in the Kaus Block at Once.

A meeting of the men of the city was held at the "gym" room last night to hear the report of the committee on organization appointed by the meeting held a week previous, the purpose of which was the organization of a social club. The report was most satisfactory. More than fifty men have agreed to become members of the club and the showing was so gratifying that the members of the organization committee were authorized to go ahead with the proceedings of incorporating and to purchase furishings and fit up the club quarters. The rooms in the second story of the Kaus block will be leased and fitted up attractively.

A week from tonight Thursday, Mar. 11, another meeting will be held at the same place, and it is expected that at that time the organization of the club by incorporation will have been practically completed.

The club, as a boosters' organization, can accomplish much for Red Lake Falls and the enthusiasm with which the movement has been received by the men of the town is an indication that the value of such an organization is appreciated.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: Either a man is always wronging somebody or somebody is wronging him.

The way to make any nonsense sound reasonable to a girl is to put it into a song or a love letter.

DO YOU WANT

All the Profits Your Farm Can Yield

Every farmer would naturally answer "yes" and most of them would follow the answer up with the question: "Why do you ask?"
Now the reason we ask if you want all the profits your farm can yield, is simply, because we thought such a question would interest you.
Take for instance your SEED.
Your crop—your biggest profit maker—depends on what kind of seed you sow.

Dirty seed don't yield and weeds won't make you any profit.

To lay the foundation for a good, profit-bringing crop you must sow CLEAN SEED.

"I know all this," you will say—yes we know you do, we just want to take you into the spirit of our reasoning—CLEAN SEED. How do you get it? The fanning mill, yes.

And right here we are at the heart of our subject—and your profit making.

We have always contended that the fanning mill is the most important implement on the farm, because IF YOU HAVE A GOOD ONE it means CLEAN SEED, LARGER CROPS AND BETTER PRICES.

Of course we have sold fanning mills for 20 years, so we may be a little prejudiced—but honestly, don't you believe it will pay you to get the BEST FANNING MILL POSSIBLE, when in the market for one?

THE FANNING MILLS we sell, clean, separate and grade all your seed and grain more thoroly and with better capacity, than any other machine of their size in the world.

After the first harvest it is the CHEAPEST FANNING MILL YOU CAN BUY.

A few things our mills do to perfection.

They will increase the yield fully 20 per cent.

They will enable you to sell your grain at top notch price, and save hundreds of dollars in other ways.

They will separate wheat from oats, or will separate any other mixed grains, doing the work perfectly and without waste.

They will clean and grade your seed grain, giving you the plump, healthy seed to plant, and saving the rest, which makes very valuable feed.

They will save all of the timothy seed.

They will rid your farm of weeds.

They will do all your work to your ENTIRE SATISFACTION, and do it faster and better than any other mill made.

They are made of the very best materials.

They can be furnished with a bagging attachment, which will save the time and expense of one man.

They are sold on a positive guarantee to do what we claim.

You can buy them for cash or on time.

Call at my warehouse and see the machines on exhibition.

If they do not do all we claim, you need not keep them, so it is your own fault if you don't have a good FANNING MILL.

The Canny Scot.

Sandy, the porter of a large school, had a small dog of which he was very fond, and was teased about the animal he would say:

"I wouldn't take twenty shillings for ma wee doggy."

Some of the older boys decided to test Sandy's assertion, and making up twenty, led up to the familiar statement, when one of them said: "Now, Sandy, I'd like that dog myself, and here's twenty shillings if you'll sell him."

He counted out twenty shillings on the table near Sandy. Without a smile the man drew a sixpence from his pocket, and said, as he took up the twenty shillings:

"Weel, I didna say I wouldn't take nineteen shillings and saxpence for him."

"It is never too late to learn," quoted the moralizer. "True," rejoined the demoralizer, "but we usually learn that it's too late."

Something.

Mrs. Crimsonbeak—I don't see that anything is being done in this advanced day for women.

Mr. Crimsonbeak—You don't? Well, just let me tell you that a single manufacturing company produced and sold over 75,000 electric flat-irons last year.

It isn't safe to judge by appearances. The man who acts ferocious abroad may be as meek as a lamb at home.

Over the Northwest

MANY IMMIGRANTS COME HERE.

Statistics Show Minnesota to Rank Twelfth in Aliens Received.

A digest of information pertaining to Minnesota immigration prepared by Charles W. Seaman shows that during the past fiscal year there has been a decrease in the number of persons coming from all countries, with the exception of England.

There has been a marked decrease in all immigration during the last fiscal year, the number of Scandinavian immigrants falling to 30,796, or 22,629 less than the preceding one.

Minnesota ranks twelfth as to number of persons coming to this country. In 1904 it ranked ninth.

Fifty-five Minnesota aliens were reported to the immigration bureau for deportation. Thirty-nine were deported by the Minneapolis and Duluth offices and the other cases were dismissed. Among those reported for deportation the following causes were given: Convict, 1; contract labor, 4; surreptitious entry, 7; insane, 30; trachoma, 2; tuberculosis, 9, and other miscellaneous causes, 2.

Minnesota's net alien gain for the fiscal year is 7,875. It is shown that 12,113 aliens arriving in the United States were destined for Minnesota, but the exodus of aliens from Minnesota amount to 4,240 for the year. Of the aliens leaving Minnesota, 12 were professional people, 893 skilled laborers, 3,006 of miscellaneous occupations and 329 with no occupation. The division of naturalization shows that the twelve federal courts of the state issued 193 certificates of naturalization and that 1,407 were issued by the eighty-three district courts of the state.

APPROVE GILBERT CAMPUS.

"U" Regents Will Not Adopt All of the Plans.

Although the board of regents of the University of Minnesota approves the plans of Cass Gilbert, the St. Paul architect, who won the prize in the campus extension fund, they will not make use of them in the immediate future. "The board has no such ambitious scheme of new construction in view as the tentative sketches submitted by Mr. Gilbert provide for," says the board in its report to Gov. Johnson. "They were merely designed to indicate what the future may require and what future generations may accomplish."

The regents purpose to construct and locate the new buildings with the view of convenience and sightliness.

The total receipts for the campus extension fund from the sale of the certificates of indebtedness, interest on the principal, and the sale of a house amounted to $451,487.50, while the expenditures from the fund were $373,993.33.

Rentals from the buildings on the new campus extension from Sept. 1, 1907, to January, 1909, reached the sum of $4,449.21, while the expenditures for repairs was $1,419.87, leaving a balance of $3,029.34.

The regents have received in subscriptions for the Elliott hospital site fund the sum of $40,000, and the interest to Jan. 12, which is $752.79, brings the total up to $40,752.79.

WHITE PLAGUE CLAIMS MORE.

Death Rate From Tuberculosis Is Increasing in St. Paul.

If the St. Paul Anti-tuberculosis society cannot stop the alarming increase in the death rate from tubercular causes, all St. Paul may become afflicted with the white plague. Figures given out by Christofer Easton of the State Tuberculosis society show that the death rate has increased in the past four years. The number of tuberculosis deaths from 1903 to 1907 is 210, 244, 274, 246, 315, with an average of 258 for the period. The deaths per 100,000 for these years are 114, 128, 139, 120, 149, and an average of 131. The percentage of all deaths is 10.8, 12.0, 13.9, 10.9, 13.1, while the average is 12.15.

In Minneapolis there has been a decrease in the death rate for the same period. The number of tuberculosis deaths are 332, 310, 293, 318, 330, with an average of 313 for that time. The deaths per 100,000 was 138, 124, 112, 116, 116, and an average of 121. The percentage of all deaths was 13.9, 13.7, 11.9, 11.6, 11.5, while the average is 12.5. The averages are practically the same for the two cities, though in one city the rate has decreased and in the other increased.

A bill has been introduced in the lower house of the Montana legislature that would prevent, after five years, the holding of lands in Montana by aliens. It is aimed at the Chinese and Japanese and is said to be patterned after the California measure which caused a protest from President Roosevelt.

INDORSES PARENTAL SCHOOL.

Olsen Makes Some Recommendations in Report to Legislature.

J. W. Olsen, former state superintendent of public instruction, in his last biennial report submitted to the legislature, urges other communities to adopt parental schools, such as established in St. Paul. He speaks of the necessity of establishing a school for truants or incorrigibles, which shall be intermediate between that of the public school and the state training school. St. Paul is the only city that has adopted this plan, and its complete success has moved Mr. Olsen to recommend its adoption in other cities.

Medical inspection of schools is recommended because it is promotive of the welfare of the individual and of the state in consequence. While medical inspection would not eliminate entirely it would tend to reduce to a minimum the liability to contagion among pupils. The Minneapolis schools are the solitary case where medical inspection prevails, and is productive of much good.

Mr. Olsen makes a vigorous appeal to the legislature to provide for a school census.

CIVIL WAR HERO

Former Col. A. Wilkin of Ninth Minnesota volunteers, in whose memory the legislature is asked to raise a statue.

Every soldier in the state is boosting to secure a legislative appropriation for the erection of a statue of Alexander Wilkin, colonel of the Ninth Minnesota volunteer infantry.

Bills appropriating $10,000, or as much as may be needed, are now before the finance committee of the senate and the appropriations committee of the house. The measures provide that the statue be placed in one of the niches of the new capitol building.

When the war broke out Mr. Wilkin organized the first company of the First Minnesota regiment and was made captain later. He was commissioned in the regular army for conspicuous bravery at Bull Run, Sept. 10, 1861. He was commissioned as major of the Second Minnesota March 21, 1862; was promoted to lieutenant colonel of the Second regiment, and later was made colonel of the Ninth Minnesota.

He was killed while resisting a desperate charge of the enemy at the battle of Tupelo, Mississippi, July 14, 1864. He was an exemplary officer, one of the bravest of the brave, and was a brother of former Judge Wilkin of St. Paul, after whom Wilkin street was named.

WANTS PROBE OF EXPRESS.

George S. Loftus Files Complaint With Commerce Commission.

George S. Loftus, special commissioner of the Shippers' Association of Minnesota, has filed a complaint with the interstate commerce commission against the Adams, United States, American, Wells-Fargo and all the other big express companies.

The complaint charges that the companies, on a small capital—not to exceed $2,000,000—realize immense returns, because of the monopoly they maintain.

By reason of this monopoly the complaint alleges the rates charged are out of all reason and the interstate commerce commission is asked to reduce the rates. Loftus believes they should be reduced 50 per cent.

GETS BIG FACTORY.

The American Smelting and Refining company, backed by the Guggenheims, copper kings, and rated at over $100,000,000, is now negotiating with the railroads entering the Twin Cities, particularly the Great Northern and Northern Pacific, with a view to having them purchase the products on an immense $1,000,000 brass foundry plant, which it is planned to erect in the near future in the Midway district.

Too Late.

Mifkins (to Piffer)—She's a stunning woman, old man, and you're bound to be stuck on her. But don't mention laundry or anything like that! Her grandmother was a washerwoman.

Piffer (later, to the lady in question, as he relates a story)—Yes, indeed! I can tell you, it took the starch—beg pardon! the nerve—right out of me.

Yes, Alonzo, it is possible to get a pair of pinchers at a shoe store.

Mrs. Powell Says She Has Found Ideal Health Recipe

BY ETHEL LLOYD PATTERSON.

Three hundred nights on a Brooklyn housetop have proved that Mrs. Alma Webster Powell has the courage of her convictions, and incidentally that a dog is easier to convert than a husband.

But for wholesale conversation let but the gentler sex hear how Mrs. Powell's "teeth grew whiter, hair grew blacker, and the flush of health came to her cheeks," and the proper enthusiasm over her receipt will be forthcoming.

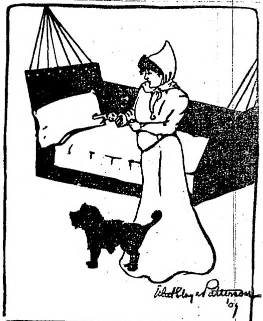
It is a very simple receipt. In vulgar parlance it reads: "Take to the tall timber." Mrs. Powell would interpret: "Sleep on the roof."

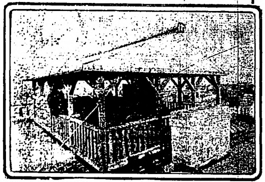
So this is where Mrs. Powell and the dog become central figures in the open air drama, while the husband becomes conspicuous by his absence. "Although," Mrs. Powell explained for him. "I have almost persuaded Mr. Powell—he is thirty years older than I am—to start my treatment in the spring."

"He needs it?" interrogatively from the interviewer.

"Everybody needs it," inclusively from Mrs. Powell. "The universally higher standard of health that would be established through the practice of roof sleeping cannot be overestimated.

"I myself come of a physically weak family. Since last April, when I first determined to try it, I have slept every night upon the roof. I have not missed one night.





Icicles a Foot Long.

"During the cold spell, awhile ago, the icicles that hung around me were almost a foot long. During the damp weather my hair has been soaked with raindrops, but—look at me!"

The interviewer looked. If "buxom" did not belong to that class of words that usually arouses a lady's ire, it might prove descriptive in Mrs. Powell's case.

In defense to the lady's feelings, then, let us say more euphoniously that she "is the picture of health." She is easily five feet seven inches in height. Her cheeks are a dash of scarlet, and her teeth are a flash of ivory topped by the somber shadow of her hair.

"No, I had no organic affection of any kind," Mrs. Powell went on. "I really started to sleep on the roof because I felt that I did not get enough fresh air during the day. I am studying psychology at Columbia, you know as well as instructing in singing. I found, after the extension of the subway to Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, that my day consisted of two hours underground, six hours in Columbia university and Barnard college, and my evenings in concert halls and in teaching.

"I commenced to have horrible pains at the back of my head and rushes of blood to the brain. It was time for me to pause and consider a remedy. I seemed to see in my mind's eye how the exhaled breath of a person becomes poison and hangs above their face if the air does not circulate sufficiently before them to remove it.

Must Be Actual Air Motion.

"An open window is not enough—there must be actual air motion. I tried an electric fan, but I found that that was only blowing back over me the stale air. About 2 o'clock one morning I arose, took my blanket and pillow, and climbed to the roof That is all. That is the whole story. I will never sleep in the house again.

"As winter approached I had a portion of the roof fenced in, and a light covering placed over to keep away the heavier rains. Clad in a red sweater, a Russian outer garment of fine wool and a woolen sleeping cap, I mount the scuttle stairs each night with Nip, my poodle, following me, and my 44 caliber revolver grasped in my hand. The combination of Nip and the gun make me burglar-proof.

"Nip?" Mrs. Powell repeated in answer to my question. "He is most certainly thoroughly converted. He is as much of a fresh air fiend as I am. Look at him now, the darling with his nose poked out through that opening of the window. He just loves the roof. He has his own little bed alongside of my hammock, with the same kind of covers that I use. I really believe he could not sleep indoors now any more than I could.

"Mr. Powell, my husband?" Mrs. Powell wound up, in a tone that was not exactly that of a slave wife. "Well, really, I think I will be able to convert him, too."

A Unique Farm.

Near the town of Jasper a settler has a farm which probably is unlike any other in the world. This farm occupies the tableland on the summit of a ridge and is inclosed with a fence which no animal has ever broken through. It does not rise above the surface of the farm, but falls sheer from the edge of a distance of many feet. The man who homesteaded the tableland had a hard climb up the face of the cliff to reach the comparatively level summit. By blasting and drilling the discoverer made a path by which stock could be brought up, and now has horses, cattle and hogs in his fertile kingdom, but no wheeled vehicle has ever been taken there.

Hotten's division of slang terms for inebriety would be useful in police courts if fashion did not so quickly change in this respect. The following were classified as denoting mild intoxication: Beery, bemused, boozy, bosky, buffy, corned, foggy, fou, fresh, hazy, elevated, kisky, lushy, mooney, muggy, muzzy, on, screwed, stewed, tight and winey. In an intermediate class stood podgy, beargered, blued, cut, primed, lumpy, muddled, ploughed, obfuscated, swipey, three sheets in the wind, and topheavy.

Chief Justice's Golf Stroke.

The lord chief justice, now on circuit at Birmingham, had a curious experience while playing golf over the Edgbaston course with Walter Whiting, the local professional. At the second hole his lordship drove into a bunker, the ball lying badly under the bank. Taking his niblick, he hit hard. The ball jumped into the air and dropped into his right hand jacket pocket.

Women rule the waves of the matrimonial sea.

"A dangerous neighborhood you're living in, Colonel," said a newspaper man to Charles Edwards of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, a few nights ago in Washington. "Been four highway robberies there in the past month. Aren't you afraid that somebody will hold you up and go through you some night?"

"Should say not," said the big Texan. "Why, ah've got so few means on my pusson at the present time that the robber who goes through me will get hisself in debt."

Flattering Scales.

When Grover Cleveland's son Richard was born his good friend, Joseph Jefferson, drove over to Gray Gables to congratulate the father.

"How many pounds does the child weigh?" asked the noted actor.

"Fifteen," was the reply.

"Nine," said the attending physician, who had just come in.

Mr. Cleveland assured the doctor that he must be mistaken. "The child weighs fifteen pounds," said he; "I weighed him myself with the scales Joe and I use when we go fishing." [illegible]

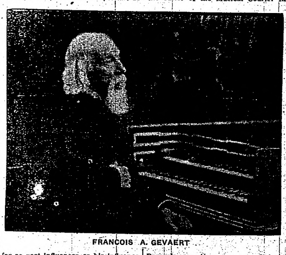
DEATH OF FRANCOIS AUGUSTE GEVAERT

The year ends with the death of one of the most prominent names in music in Europe and, in his particular field, probably the most important so far as past influences or his influence on the development of the art is concerned.



FRANCOIS A. GEVAERT

Francois Auguste Gevaert, the director of the Brussels Conservatory of Music, passed away at his home in Brussels on Christmas, having reached his eightieth year. Although a composer, most of his work was devoted to the pedagogic branch and to the control of an institution that years ago had reached fame and an eminent standing in the musical world, for the Brussels conservatory has been responsible for the culture of the best music and its effects have been far reaching.

The photograph from which the above cut was made was obtained by the editor of the Musical Courier in Brussels some two years ago. It is an excellent picture of the old gentleman as he looked in his last year. And indeed he was a gentleman of the real old school.

FROM ROUSTABOUT TO HEAD OF THEATRICAL SYNDICATE

About thirty years ago a little boy by the name of Abraham L. Erlanger applied to Manager John Ellsler of the old Academy of Music, Cleveland, for a job as "roustabout," and he got it. He never had any doubts about getting it, for the simple reason that he went after it—and he has been going after things and getting things ever since. Now he is at the head of the theatrical "syndicate," that much-discussed, much-praised, much-roasted organization, which keeps on growing and growing, and now controls, directly or indirectly, property conservatively estimated at about $225,000,000.

The following will give some fair idea of why he has been getting things the past few years, and why he will continue to get them.

Having secured the job as roustabout young Erlanger started to roust. He swept the floors. He took care of the cloak rooms and the opera glass stand. He bossed the ushers, performed as callboy, sold tickets, shifted scenes, played parts in emergency cases and was hungry for more. He had outside interests, too, going to school, playing baseball, fighting, playing jokes on the police and helping friends. He was "on the job," as it were, no matter where, when or why. It was all one to him as long as he had something to do.

First Promotion—Assistant stage manager.

Second Promotion—Treasurer and business manager of Mark Hanna's Euclid Avenue opera house.

By way of explanation it is of interest to note that Mr. Ellsler first had charge of the Euclid Avenue property. Moving into his new offices, he took the indispensable Erlanger with him.

ABRAHAM ERLANGER

A temporary panic forced a sheriff's sale, Mark Hanna blossoming out as the new owner. L. G. Hanna, his brother, was placed in charge, but he ran to "whiskers and inexperience" and Mark Hanna soon found it out, with the result that Erlanger was placed in charge.

This is now said by many best posted on such matters to be the beginning of a new era in theatrical affairs in the United States. Cleveland, which had hitherto been the worst show town in the country, became one of the best. It was all because Erlanger knew the value of publicity. His advertising was aggressive and of the wide-open kind. He spent a lot of money and made a lot. This attracted the notice of men further East, and they began to make him offers. These, flattering as they were, he declined with thanks, as it would necessitate leaving his mother and sisters alone, and the thought did not appeal to him.

Later, however, he went out as advance agent for Mr. and Mrs. George S. Knight, following this up by taking charge of the Joseph Jefferson tour. In spite of protests he raised prices and advertised, asserting that "Rip Van Winkle," as played by Jefferson, was worth $2 a seat. He was successful.

Then followed a temporary arrangement with Marc Klaw for the management of another show. This resulted in a permanent partnership between the two men, and they are still in harness together. In appearance and actions the two men are entirely different, it is said, but that, perhaps, is the reason why they hitch so nicely. They now look upon each other as lifelong friends. Each has great respect for the other, and every new enterprise is taken up jointly.

The team work of Klaw and Erlanger is something which can't be beat. What one doesn't know the other does, what one wants, the other wants. Both are business men, both, it is said, have a sense of the fitness of things at all times and places, both appreciate art in all its varying phases and both are happy—happy in the everyday life of the present. It is the work they revel in. They love it.

Coming back to Erlanger, think of the boy who applied for a job as roustabout in the old Academy of Music at Cleveland, and then picture the theatrical magnate in his extremely artistic offices at the New Amsterdam theater in New York. Having done this, forget the picture, forget the beautiful theater and try to see him work. Every morning he gets reports as to the business of theaters the night before in every important city on the American continent. He is at the head of more big theatrical corporations than any other man, this resulting in hundreds of little details that need attending to, not some time in the near future, but at once. Scores of letters pile up on his desk, but they disappear in double quick time. He meets hundreds of people daily, and they nearly all come on business. The syndicate's plans, his own plans, Kaw's plans, those of the many corporations to which he belongs—it's all the same to him, as long as there is work to do, something to keep his mind active.

How does he do it?

Theatrical folk high and low attribute it to the fact that he is living his own life, a full life, in the fullest sense of the term. He has a fine home and a fine family. He has fine instincts. He denies that there is "nothing new under the sun," and is interested in everything. Last and not least, he takes healthful exercise, and makes it a point to keep himself in good condition, thereby keeping interested.

In conclusion: He is just the same in many respects as when a boy. He doesn't mention the fact that Presidents Grant, Hayes, Cleveland and McKinley were friends of his, or that President Garfield was a particularly warm friend. The boyish spirit is there—the forgetfulness of self and the thought of what's doing.

So say theatrical folk.

Taking His Pick.

The burly prisoner stood unabashed before the judge.

"Prisoner at the bar," asked the clerk of the arraigns, "do you wish to challenge any of the jury?"

The prisoner looked them over carefully.

"Well," he replied, "I'm not exactly wot you'd call in training, but I wouldn't mind a round or two with that there fat old josser in the corner."

Slim Diet.

A certain father, who is fond of putting his boys through natural history examinations, is often surprised by their mental agility. He recently asked them to tell him "what animal is satisfied with the least nourishment."

"The moth!" one of them shouted confidently. "It eats nothing but holes."

The man who condones a neighbor's sin is often preparing his own repentance in advance.

Like Statues.

The old lady with the pale blue umbrella had been standing at the stationery counter for ten minutes.

"I want to be waited on," she snapped impatiently.

"Certainly, madam," hastened the tall floorwalker. "Do you wish a stationery clerk?"

"Stationary clerk! Gracious! They all seem stationary. They don't want to move."

Long Drawn Out Chinese Dinners—When an Eskimo Is Hungry.

Sir Robert Hart, the veteran inspector general of the Chinese customs, speaking at a dinner in London the other day, said that he once in Peking sat out a banquet that lasted seventeen consecutive hours. There were 125 courses, and he tasted them all. Mr. Ward, the American envoy to China, who tried to secure an interview with the Emperor Hieng-Fung in 1859 tells how he was entertained at a dinner that lasted from noon one day until 6 o'clock on the evening of the day following. The total number of courses is not given, but Ward mentions that he had to give in after partaking of 138 different dishes, "whereupon his hosts wondered greatly"—presumably at his abstemiousness.

Probably, however, the Eskimo banquets last longer than any other, and the quantity of food swallowed is also proportionately greater. Ross records that seven of his party of natives once ate continuously for thirty-three hours, during which time they consumed 200 pounds of seal meat. Europeans exposed to the same climatic conditions act in much the same way. Capt. Scott of the Discovery, on his return from his long sledge journey over the inland ice of the antarctic continent did nothing but eat and sleep for the space of three days and nights, and even then he was still hungry.

Commander Peary and his party, returning famished from their futile dash for the pole in 1906, slaughtered a herd of seven musk oxen on Hazen Island, off the extreme north of Greenland. For two days and nights thereafter they crouched inside their snow huts, eating continuously, and when they had finished the pile of bones outside was "as high as a tall man's chin."

Louise was just four years old when one day she came to her mother and said, "Mother dear, I'se so nervous!"

THE St. Paul correspondent of the Thief River News has a vivid imagination. He says that, among others, "Attorney General Young made the arguments for Thief River Falls." As a matter of fact General Young has not been interested in the bill in any way. So far the Hon. D. P. O'Niell has been the sole orator for Thief River, and curses on the man who intimates that Dan's dulcet tones, faultless diction and charming presence are not equal to the occasion!

MR. BRYAN is reported as saying in Denver as to his probable candidacy for president in 1912:

"I am not an out-and-out candidate, but if the people of this country, if my own party should demand that I make the race again, standing for my well-known principals and ideas, why, I do not see how I could refuse."

And the St. Cloud Times adds: "How long, oh Lord, how long?"

JUDGE F. V. BROWN of Minneapolis, who recently resigned his position, has entered the employ of the Great Northern road as counsel. He will be obliged to move to Seattle, as that city will be his headquarters. Judge Brown has been considered as a likely candidate for the democratic nomination for governor next year, but he evidently prefers a soft legal berth with a fat salary to the uncertainties of politics.

AN exchange thinks that Abraham Lincoln would have made a good member of the modern commercial club. He once said this: "I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. I like to see a man who lives in it so that his place will be proud of him. Be honest, but hate no one; overturn a man's wrong-doing, but do not overturn him unless it must be done in overturning the wrong. Stand, with him while he is right, and part with him when he goes wrong."

THE latest thing in an educational way that is proposed is a course preparatory to matrimony in which young men and women are to be taught some important things relative to marriage, says the St. Cloud Times. An eastern magazine thinks that it would make a fine course in a University. Out here ability to cook a good meal on the part of the woman and the husband's ability to settle the grocery and butcher bills are still considered the most potent qualifications for "love in a cottage [illegible]

IN a recent paper read by President Northrop of the state university, he said in part: "The man who is searching for technical religious instruction, such as the church is accustomed to give or was accustomed to give years ago, may not find it, but when you tell a student that he must exercise self-control, restrain his appetites and passions, be kind and just and helpful to his fellowmen and to do as he would wish them to do to him, and that he must be reverent, if he would lead a truly manly life, you are teaching him a large amount of truth, it may not be technical religious teaching but it is christianlike teaching."

IN New Zealand an automatic device has just been patented for telling railway passengers the name of the next station. The names of the various stations are printed on a roll, which is rotated by toothed wheels. A "tripper" is placed, either on the track or by its side, between each station, and this is so adjusted as to strike a lever on the passing car. The motion is communicated to the toothed wheels governing the roll bearing the station names, and the ringing of the automatic bell announces to the passengers the fact that the name of the next station is on view.

JOHN LAWSON, the well-known newspaper correspondent, who has been keeping close tab on the tonnage tax proposition, says in a recent letter:

"It is difficult to predict what action the house will take with regard to the Bjorge tonnage tax bill when it is reported back to the legislature. When that will be is uncertain. Another hearing is to be had this week when an opportunity will be afforded Mr. Bjorge to controvert the argument made by Mr. Congdon. After that the committee will consider the different phases of the subject and arrive at some conclusion, or, possibly, may report the bill out without recommendation. Earlier in the session those familiar with the views of members had concluded that the bill would pass the house if it ever came to a vote. Since then, however, the opponents of a tonnage tax have been active and there may be a change of alignment."

A RECENT press dispatch from Washington told of a plan to ship 5,000 cats from Chicago to Japan to assist in preventing plague by exterminating a large part of the rat population. But Chicago cat specialists doubt the city's ability to provide any such number as Japan seems to need. One dealer who recently sent 100 tabbies to New Orleans declares that to obtain 5,000 is impossible. "I had an order for 500 cats," he says. "I have advertised widely and the most I could get was 100. Thus it would seem to be impossible to gather 5,000 cats in Chicago. If the Japs want cats let them get them in small places. A big city is no place to corral them."

THE St. Hilaire Spectator is ready to fight for Red Lake county at the drop of the hat, and repels the suggestion that any county on earth has anything on us as far as the dairy industry is concerned. The Spectator says:

"We are compelled to take issue with the editor of the Norman County Herald when he states that Norman county is the dairy center of northern Minnesota. For quality or quantity Red Lake county produces more and better butter and cheese than any other county in northern Minnesota. The northern part of Red Lake county excels in butter, the southern part in cheese, and we have the medals to prove that our products excel. While they have fourteen creameries in Norman county, we have eight creameries and four cheese factories. However, the product of the St. Hilaire creamery will equal the combined product of the four best creameries in Norman county. It has been estimated that butter and cheese brought the farmers of Red Lake county over $300,000 annually.

COUNTY ditches are considered by the courts to be public waterways and they cannot be filled up or obstructed without the person doing the damage being liable to a fine. Where a country ditch runs across a farmer's land or through his pasture he naturally comes to consider that portion of it to be in a way under his control. But it is not. He cannot let his live stock trample down the embankments or cave the earth into the channel in any way that will prevent the flowage of water, for which the ditch was constructed, without laying himself liable to arrest. It is said that some of the county ditches which have been constructed at a heavy expense are being filled up and will be worthless owing to the carelessness or indifference of some of those whose farms they cross, and owing to livestock being allowed to cave the banks in the ditches will before long have to be cleared out, an undertaking that experience shows is about as costly as the construction of the ditch.

CALUMET
Baking Powder
Received
Highest Award
World's Pure Food Exposition
Chicago, November, 1907
What does this mean?

It means that Calumet has set a new Standard in Baking Powder—the standard of the World.

Because this award was given to Calumet after thorough tests and experiments, over all other baking powders.

It means that Calumet is the best baking powder in every particular in the world.

And this means that Calumet produces the best, most delicious, lightest, and purest baking of all baking powders.

Doesn't that mean everything to you?

Rochester Post and Record: No amount of gratuitous or partisan criticism can deprive Theodore Roosevelt of credit for at least one of the constructive feats of his administration—the aggressive and methodical attempt to conserve the the fundamental resources of the nation.

Foley Independent: Roosevelt is keeping the pace up in good shape and we feel confident that he will go under the wire with lots of strength left. While president he has at all times been able to make things interesting for violaters of the law and that he has forfeited the good will of congress is a token of his honesty.

Albert Lea Times-Enterprise: One week from tomorrow Theodore Roosevelt becomes a private citizen and Mr. Taft takes up the work of guiding the ship of state. After seven years of strenuous work in the White House we imagine it will seem rather tame to the president to be a private citizen, but as soon as he gets over in Africa hunting the big game, the strenuous times will practically return.

Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good!! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the difference. No poison marks there! You can always be on the safe side by demanding

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

"Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.

CONRAD LOHR,
Anderson, Ind. 122 E. 19th St.

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

Tickling in the Throat

"Just a little tickling in the throat!" Is that what troubles you? But it hangs on! Can't get rid of it! Home remedies don't take hold. You need something stronger—a regular medicine, a doctor's medicine. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral contains healing, quieting, and soothing properties of the highest order. Ask your doctor about this. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Constipation positively prevents good health. Then why allow it to continue? An active liver is a great preventive of disease. Ayer's Pills are liver pills. What does your doctor say?

Nothing in the way of a cough is quite so annoying as a tickling, teasing, wheezing bronchial cough. The quickest relief comes perhaps from a prescription known to Druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. And besides, it is so thoroughly harmless that mothers give it with perfect safety even to the youngest babes. The tender leaves of a simple mountain shrub gives to Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy its remarkable curative effect. A few days test will tell. Sold by all dealers.

BRAY

Special Correspondence.

A couple of weeks more and spring will be here, at least so the almanac says.

Mike Ault transacted business at the "county hub" Saturday afternoon.

John Scholin made a trip to Thief River Falls Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Schumacher left last Friday for Lanesboro, Iowa, where they intend to make their future home. They have, during the five years they have lived here, made many friends who regret to see them leave our community.

Oscar Swanson drove to Thief River Falls Wednesday after a load of fence posts.

John Scholin sold a team of horses to Akerlund Bros. last Wednesday.

Wm. Worstall arrived from Iowa last week and has settled down on the Schumaker farm which he has bought.

A dance was given at the Schumacher home last Tuesday evening. Quite a crowd was present and a good time was had by all.

Iver Johnson disposed of his oxen last week and intends to purchase a team of horses intead.

H. F. Anderson, superintendent of schools, visited our school last week. He expressed great satisfaction at the progress and improvement made during the last few years.

A. E. Anderson and daughter Clara made a trip to Wylie Saturday.

MODERN WAY OF LIVING.

Has a Tendency to Weaken the Strongest.

One hundred years ago there was less kidney trouble than there is today.

The worry, hurry, and overwork of modern living doubles the work of the kidneys, wears and weakens them until unable to properly do their duty of filtering the poisons from the blood. As a result the whole system runs down.

Heed the slightest symptom of kidney trouble—the first backache, the first irregularity of the urine. It may be the forewarning of dangerous disease. You can cure yourself quickly with Doan's Kidney Pills.

Thos. Abbotts, living on Kingston St., Caledonia, Minn., says: "I have suffered for years from kidney trouble. The kidney secretions were so frequent in action that I was compelled to arise many times during the night and I had dull pains in my back and loins. The kidney secretions were highly colored and passed with a burning sensation. At last Doan's Kidney Pills were procured and they corrected the action of my kidneys, relieved the pains in my back and since using them I have felt like a different person. I am glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to other kidney sufferers."

Plenty more proof like this from Red Lake Falls' people. Call at W. A. Schreiter's drug store and ask what the customers report.

NEW STRENGTH FOR WOMEN'S BACKS.

How to Make a Bad Back Better.

Women who suffer with backache, bearing down pain, dizzy spells, and that constant feeling of dullness and tiredness, will find hope in the advice of Mrs. Mary Hinson of 21 Strother St., Mt. Sterling, Ky. "Had I not used Doan's Kidney Pills I believe I would not be living to-day," says Mrs. Hinson. "My eyesight was poor, I suffered with nervous, splitting headaches, spots would dance before my eyes, and at times I would be so dizzy I would have to grasp something for support. My back was so weak and painful I could hardly bend over to button my shoes and could not get around without suffering severely. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the first, and I continued until practically well again."

He "Thinked" Right.

Prof. George Porter, principal of the Hallsville schools, has continually told the pupils that they should think twice before they speak. One cold morning last week Prof Porter backed up to the stove after having given expression to his famous adage, when a little boy on the front seat, after having been given permission to talk, said:

"Prof. Porter, I've thinked once."

"Think again," he replied.

"I've thinked twiced," said the youngster.

"Then speak."

"Yes, sir. I thinked your coat tail was a scorchin'; now I think it is ablaze," replied the urchin.

Professor Munyon has just issued a most beautiful, useful and complete Almanac; it contains not only all the scientific information concerning the moon's phases, in all the latitudes, but has illustrated articles on how to read character by phrenology, palmistry and birth month. It also tells all about card reading, birth stones and their meaning, and gives the interpretation of dreams. It teaches beauty culture, manicuring, gives weights and measures, and antidotes for poison. In fact, it is a Magazine Almanac, that not only gives valuable information, but will afford much amusement for every member of the family, especially for parties and evening entertainments. Farmers and people in the rural districts will find this Almanac almost invaluable.

It will be sent to anyone absolutely free on application to the MUNYON REMEDY COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA.

Her Fatal Error.

He was supposed to be a poor but otherwise honest young man, while she was admittedly a thing of beauty.

"Will you marry me?" he asked.

"No," she answered.

"You are very short," he muttered

"Ditto," she replied. "That's why there is nothing doing in the matrimonial line."

"Oh, I don't know," he sneered, as he extracted an obese billbook from an inside pocket and displayed a number of $1,000 bills. "I'm not so short."

Whereupon the unwary maid tried to fall upon his neck, but he gracefully sidestepped and she fell to the floor in a faint.

Why He Wept.

Little Bobby had been scraping the snow from the sidewalk for two hours. The minister, passing down the street, found him weeping as though his heart would break.

"What's the trouble, my little man?" asked the minister in consoling tones.

"Boohoo!" sobbed Bobby, as he mopped his eyes with his sleeve. "Bad tramp came along and stole the snow shovel from the little boy next door."

"Well, my lad, it is nice to be sympathetic, but you must not worry too much over other people's affairs."

"Oh, it isn't that, sir. I'm weeping 'cause he didn't steal my shovel, too."

PRIZE FOOD

Palatable, Economical, Nourishing.

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for seven years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts I was a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

"They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe siege of whooping cough they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed.

"Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us."

Dr. Van Es Proves That Cholera Serum Is Success

In Report to Excutive Officer of the State Sanitary Board, A. C. Professor Says Experiments Show That Virus Serum Will Check Hog Cholera.

DR. VAN ES ON HOG CHOLERA SERUM.

The results of experiments at the A. C. bear out the claims that in the use of virus-serum we have very efficient means of checking hog cholera.

I consider it unnecessary that all hogs be immunized promiscuously in the country.

Breeders who take their stock to swine shows, fairs and sales, should always have their swine immunized.

When outbreaks occur the live stock board should be immediately notified.

A cordon of immune animals should be established around the center where cholera breaks out.

All hogs showing evidences of cholera should be destroyed and burned immediately to prevent the carrying of the disease.

I am confident that if such measures be taken, the danger from cholera can be reduced tto insignificant proportions.

While the cost of producing serum by the present method is sufficiently low to warrant its generalusefulness, certainly increase the range of its use, a reduction of this cost would

From Fargo Forum.

The above are some of the prime results of the investigation of the prevention of hog cholera carried on at the agricultural college by Dr. Louis Van Es and contained in his report to Dr. W. F. Crowe, executive officer of the live stock sanitary board of North Dakota.

All but a small portion of the report is taken up with these experiments in preventing the disease which is so dreaded by farmers and is an evidence of the vast improvement of the discovery of preventing cholera by vaccination.

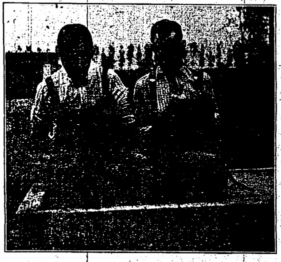
Under the authorization of the board of trustees of the agricultural college the writer, during th emonth of July, 1908, visited the bureau of animal industry experiment farm at Ames, Iowa, in order to become acquainted with a new method, devised by Doctors Dorset, McBryde and Niles of the bureau mentioned, of preventing hog cholera.

The writer returned from Iowa quite convinced of the practical value of the method and after rendering the report of his findings was authorized and instructed by the station authorities to proceed in the manufacture of a limited amount of serum.

Essentially the method consists in rendering the animals passively immune by the injection of an antitoxic serum, and while the animal is thus protected to make its immunity active by exposing it to natural infection by injecting it with a small quantity of virulent blood.



Courtesy Fargo Forum.

FIG. 1. HYPER-IMMUNIZATION BY SIMULTANEOUS METHOD.

The first step in the manufacture of serum consists of the immunization of the hogs, which later are to furnish the protective serum. This is done by the simultaneous injection of a quantity of protective serum previously obtained and some virulent blood.

Hogs which do not receive the protecting serum, promptly sicken with cholera in from seven to fourteen days and when the disease has reached its fullest development, they are bled to death and the blood carefully collected. This blood is used for hyper-immunizing purposes, as well as for the propogation of the virus.

Hyper-immunizing consists of the introduction of an erroneous amount of virulent blood into the system of the immunes (Fig. 1).

Hogs treated in this way become hyper-immune in from five to ten days and their blood will confer a passive immunity when injected into a susceptible animal. The hyper-immune blood is drawn by cutting a piece off the animal's tail under sterile conditions and the blood collected. (Fig. 2.)

The blood drawings are kept until the final bleeding (Fig 3), when all the blood from one animal or from several is mixed. This is done in order to secure a uniform product. After this the hyper-immune blood should be tested as to its potency by injecting it into pigs, simultaneously with the cholera blood of known virulence.

When hogs are to be immunized against cholera this hyper-immune blood is injected under the skin on the inner side of the thigh, and when hogs so injected are exposed to natural infection this one injection is sufficient. If, however, there is no such exposure or when the exposure is questionable, it is necessary to inject virulent blood at the same time in order to obtain active immunity. In our experiments this has proven to be of great importance, especially when we are working in herds in which the disease has just made its appearance.

Owing to the introduction and subsequent dissemination of the disease throughout the state there has been ample opportunity for watching the result of the method under natural conditions. In fact, so great was the demand that in the beginning of our work the serum was issued the moment it was drawn from the hyper-immunes.

At this date it is not possible to make a careful analysis of the results obtained with the serum in the field, because the returns are quite incomplete. Let it be enough to say for the present that in many instances the returns have been very favorable, while in others failures can be recorded. There is reason to believe, however, that the latter are principally due to the lateness of the serum injections in regard to the beginning of the introduction of the infection in the herd, in fact, some of the returns show that only sick hogs were injected, in spite of the explicit instructions to the contrary.

After describing the experiments which were undertaken with the agricultural college herd, all of which proved very conclusively that the virus will be of great importance in the eradication of hog cholera, Dr. Van Es continues:

From our experiments it would seem advisable to practice the simultaneous virus-serum injections in all herds in which infection had not yet been introduced, and also in those where immunization is undertaken at the beginning of the outbreak and in which only a limited number of cases have occurred. Also in herds which are divided in several separate lots the simultaneous method should be used.

Our results in the college herd clearly bear out the claims of the bureau of animal industry, that in this method we have a very efficient means of checking this disease. The results here mentioned are the more striking when we remember that after the disease was once introduced no other precaution was taken. There was not a drop of disinfectant used; the regular attendants of the herd assisted me regularly when bleeding and handling the diseased animals in our infection pens. From Sept. 7 to Nov. 16 cholera sick animals were constantly present in the swinery, so that the facilities for infection were certainly numerous and the danger far greater than under ordinary farm conditions.

FIG. 3. FINAL BLEEDING AND COLLECTING OF BLOOD.

The question may be asked, how can this serum be used to protect our swine growers against cholera?

In answering this question we consider it unnecessary that all hogs be immunized promiscuously, when no infection is in the country. The time may come when this may be possible, but our present facilities for the manufacture of serum would be entirely inadequate for the demand to be expected in such a case.

Breeders, who take their stock to swine follows, fairs, sales, etc., however, should always have their swine immunized.

When outbreaks of cholera occur, the live stock sanitary board should at once be advised and this board should then immediately begin to immunize the hogs around the original outbreak with a view of establishing a cordon of immune animals around a primary focus of infection. The immunization in such cases should be done by the simultaneous method, and while this is done all hogs showing evidence of cholera should be immediately destroyed and burned. By the latter measure the danger of having infection carried out of the immune zone by intermediary bearers would be reduced to a minimum.

The author is convinced that if such a measure be promptly taken the danger from cholera can be reduced to insignificant proportions.

While the method given to the world by Doctors Dorset, McBryde and Niles is in itself quite complete and entirely practicable, there are some phases in connection with its application which should be studied with a view of reducing the cost of production of the serum and of eliminating possible danger of secondary infection from the use of virus, which had to be kept in stock for considerable time.

While the cost of producing the serum by the method taught by the bureau of animal industry is sufficiently low to warrant its general use, a reduction of this cost would certainly increase the range of usefulness of the serum as a means of eradicating hog cholera, especially in those states where this kind of work has to be carried on with inadequate funds.

Three opportunities for experimental work suggested themselves: First, the use of large animals (horses for hyper-immunization in order to obtain a greater yield of serum. Second, the increase of the hyper-immunity of serum producing hogs to a maximum, with a view of obtaining a serum of higher anitoxic value, which would enable us to reduce the immunizing doses of the serum. Third, the extraction of the various organs and tissues of the hyper-immune swine after death, with a view of ascertaining whether or not the anti-bodies can be obtained in that manner.

It would seem from Dr. Van Es' report that the experiments prove that the discovery of this means of preventing hog cholera is a success, and should be of great benefit to the hog raisers of the country in preventing the disease, which annually takes off thousands of animals at an enormous loss to the breeders.

Dr. Van Es will continue the work next spring, and there is little doubt but that many points will be obtained which will tend to increase the potency of the vaccine and make it more practical to the general farmer.

Little Girl's Philosophy.

"Youngsters are pretty philosophical," observed Wallace Knight, and then he went ahead to set forth the point of view of a small daughter at his house.

The child was sent to bed early the other evening as punishment for some act contrary to rules and regulations.

After she had been tucked in bed for some time and was supposedly asleep the youngster called her father and told him she wished he would go ahead and spank her and have it over with instead of sending her off in that way. "This lying in bed never's going to make me better," she said, "and a good spanking would. Besides, it makes me so mad I can't sleep, and so what's the use of it?"

New York's Big Channel.

Work is being rushed on the new Ambrose channel which is to form the entrance to New York harbor, in order to open the channel as early as possible to a depth of forty feet for a clear width of 1,000 feet throughout the whole of its length. The finished channel will be 2,000 feet in width by forty feet deep. In the last report the least depth over the 1,000-foot width is thirty-seven feet; but, as a matter of fact, nearly the whole area has already been dredged to the forty-foot limit. Up to the present time 54,000,000 cubic yards have been removed. Four sea-going dredges are continually at work, and they are expected to complete the channel in about two years from the present time.

A GAY YOUNG PRINCE

Is Arthur, but Other Britishers Miss Their Red Wall Paper.

The English royal family rejoices to count among its members Prince Arthur of Connaught, who is such a gay young dog that no family gathering—royal family gathering, that is—is considered complete without his presence.

Of course Christmas itself could not be merry without Arthur, so he was "had down" to Sandingham, where, so says the Lady's Pictorial, he added "considerable to the gayety of the royal gathering."

How could it be otherwise? For the same authority confides to the hoi polloi that Arthur's "spirits are irresistible and he is full of resource." What kind of resource? Well, "he can act and do imitations, and"—believe it or not, as you please—"if there is a humorous side to anything he never fails to detect it."

Now in connection with this irrepressible gayety and infallible detection of the humorous side to anything the same magazine admits that Prince Arthur's effervescent spirits bubble in somewhat solitary fashion.

"It is said," declares this conscientious British editor, "that we are no longer as genial and jovial as we were in other days. People do not let themselves go when they entertain, hosts are not what they were, and it is seldom when any entertaining is done in a private house that the table is set in a roar.

"There is no lack of noise, but the real old-fashioned hearty laughter and good-natured hospitality have gone out with solid dinners and heavy wines. The reason? Well, they are saying it is the way our dinner rooms are decorated.

"Picturesque, bright, correct they may be nowadays, but they are not homely. The English temperament likes solidity and red wall paper and that sort of thing; amid other surroundings we do not expand."

LARVAL FORM OF EELS.

Interesting Discovery for Which Science Is Indebted to Messina.

The straits of Messina are channels of immense depth, through which a wild tide surges, and owing probably to irregularities at the bottom there are whirling eddies which have the effect of bringing up from the depths below many marine creatures which are rarely seen except in the deep sea trawls. It was here that the larval form of a fresh water eel was first discovered, an incident which threw a blaze of light on the life history of a very mysterious fish.

All kinds of theories have been given forth with regard to the propagation of the eel. Some naturalists declared they bred in fresh water, others that they visited the estuary for spawning purposes, but thanks to the discovery off Messina and later captures of the eel in its larval form, it is now practically certain that after mature eels drop down our rivers in autumn they hie them to exceedingly deep water in the sea and there deposit their eggs. From the egg comes the little ribbon-shaped creature the larval form.

In due course this changes into an eel of still smaller size, strange to say, and these small eels or elvers afterward ascend our rivers and there remain until they reach maturity, when they, in their turn, descend to the sea and history is repeated.

Cruelty of Fate.

It was the first week of the glad new year, and the jokesmith had just let out a large, open-faced sigh.

Holding Firemen Accountable.

President Tuttle of the Boston & Maine Railroad has ordered his firemen to abate the smoke nuisance as much as possible. Burning coal will emit smoke, of course, but Mr. Tuttle and all railroad men know that the quantity may be diminished by care in firing. The nuisance is greatest around terminals and in the yards, and at these points the firemen are urged to be particularly careful. It is to be hoped that the orders will be heeded by the firemen who do the stoking on the engines which shift freight cars through this town. More smoke is often made, particularly at street crossings, than there is any call for, and it is an infernal nuisance to all who happen to be near by.

The American Summer.

Nature has been bountiful, and for the first time in the century have we had "a real old-fashioned" summer. It began early and continued with an almost unprecedented percentage of warm weather, growing crops which, but for local subtractions, would have exceeded any ever harvested, and which, taking into account the higher prices, are actually worth in money more than any ever gathered.

"All are loud in their praises of the great crops and that wonderful country."—Extract from correspondence National Editorial Association of August, 1908.

It is now possible to secure a homestead of 160 acres free and another 160 acres at $3.00 per acre. Hundreds have paid the cost of their farms (if purchased) and then had a balance of from $10.00 to $12.00 per acre from one crop. Wheat, barley, oats, flax—all do well. Mixed farming is a great success and dairying is highly profitable. Excellent climate, splendid schools and churches, railways bring most every district within easy reach of market. Railway and land companies have lands for sale at low prices and on easy terms.

WELL PLEASED WITH WESTERN CANADA.

GOOD CROPS, SPLENDID CLIMATE AND WELL ENFORCED LAWS.

Mr. George E. Hunter is a Maidstone, Saskatchewan (Central Canada), farmer, who writes to a Canadian Government Agent as follows:

"It was the first week in November, 1907, when we arrived here. There was very little snow or cold weather until after the holidays, then the snow and cold increased, but to no great extent. I think the coldest I heard of was 30 degrees below zero, but that degree of cold would not be felt here any more than 10 degrees below zero would be back home in Michigan, owing to the beautiful dry atmosphere of this country. There came a good thaw every month that settled the snow, the fields soon became bare, and on the 12th of April I commenced ploughing. The snow was then all gone and summer at hand. This last season was something more than an average year around here, with fine crops gathered from a large acreage. In parts the crops were less than average, but generally speaking they were above it. The price of wheat was quite good. Some fine yields sold at $1.10 per bushel, while some were marketed at much less, but hardly any went below about 60 cents a bushel.

"Oats started on the market at 35 cents a bushel, barley about 50 cents, and flax from 90 cents to $1.00 a bushel.

"As this was my first year in this country, it was a hard year for my horses, owing to their being eastern horses, and not used to the western climate, but they will soon get climatized.

"The soil on my farm is a black loam, about one foot in thickness, below that we find about six feet of clay, and below that again gravel and sand, with an abundance of excellent water. This was the condition of the ground as I found it when I dug a well. I can say that the water is as sweet and as free from alkali and impurities as I ever saw.

"My opinion is that the man who comes here with a little means can do no better than invest $500 or $1,000 in cattle, after locating a homestead adjoining or near some hilly part of the country where it will not be taken up as soon. There is plenty of grass and hay to be found in the hilly country and small lakes and sloughs will afford sufficient water for any amount of cattle. The bluffs with a few hay or straw sheds will make sufficient shelter for them. There is no need to worry about the market for cattle, as there is already a great call for stock of all kinds to satisfy the continued demands of the large packing house at Edmonton, established by Swift and Company.

"The dairy business should by no means be forgotten. It is one of the paying enterprises of this great west. The price of butter seldom goes below 25 cents and reaches as high as 40 cents a pound. Also the new creameries that are fast being erected along the lines of railroad are calling on the farmers for their cream.

"These creameries are greatly welcomed in all communities, because selling cream is better than making butter, even at an average price of 25 cents a pound. For a new country the railroad transportation facilities are good; not yet, of course, what they are in older countries, but the new lines are swiftly gaining as the country gets more settled and supplies them with produce to ship. It is hard to say too much in favor of this country. All one needs is a little money with grit and ambition. I have seen homesteads that were filed on a little over three years ago that the owners have refused $3,000 for.

"There is much more that can be said in favor of Western Canada, but I think my letter has been long enough."

Not a Favored Location.

The beauties and wonders of nature as displayed in Vancouver have formed the theme of many a traveler's rhapsody, but it appears that there are people who do not appreciate them. One such woman, born and bred in Vancouver, recently visited in New York. "It must be wonderful to have lived and grown up in such a place,' said a New Yorker who had traveled round the world.

"Why, I don't know," said the native of Vancouver, without enthusiasm. "We've just got the mountains and the sea—that's all."

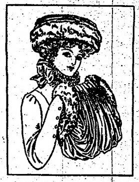
FANCIES of FASHION

LATE MUFF STYLES

VELVET, SATIN AND FUR ARE ALL PUT TO USE.

Defects May Be Covered Up by Skillful Handling of Trimmings Sanctioned—Charming Fur Set for Young Girl.

Wonderful indeed are this season's muffs of velvet, satin and fur. No muff, of course, is complete without some fur on it, but this season it is not at all necessary that the fur be used in quantity. Quite as fashionable as the all fur muffs and a great deal newer are those of velvet or satin trimmed with fur.



Muff of Panne Velvet and Fur.

This is the season, therefore, when the woman who has a muff that is somewhat the worse for wear in parts has her opportunity. If the muff be of valuable fur—sable, chinchilla, mink or sealskin—it can easily be made over into a most fascinating example of the exaggerated new styles. Other furs, of course, may also be made over, but as such a muff, when well made and of good material, is not inexpensive, it is not considered wise to use half worn fur in trimming it, unless such fur is of the more expensive kinds.

For young girls these large fancy muffs are especially attractive. In the drawing is to be noticed a charming set, muff, hat and collarette, suitable for a young girl. Panne velvet in a charming shade of blue is used for hat and muff, the trimming being white fox. The collarette is of the velvet, made into three plaited ruches and tied at the side with a bow of satin ribbon.

Ermine bands are most attractive used on muffs of the shape shown in the illustration. This fur sometimes seems to look more effective when used in bands for the trimming of hat and muff than when it is used alone. On a certain shade of soft and rather light brown velvet the narrow bands of ermine on muff and hat are most attractive. Mink or sable—sable, if possible, of course—is also most attractive on brown velvet and satin.

KEEPING THE PLANT HEALTHY.

Care of the Jardiniere Is of the Highest Importance.

A mistake that causes many failures in growing palms, ferns and other plants that are stood in jardinieres, is that the water which drains through the earth and the hole in the bottom of the earthenware pot is allowed to accumulate in the jardiniere.

In this way a plant is often soaked in water for days at a time and naturally it becomes soggy and sickly.

An easy way to overcome this difficulty is, about 15 minutes after a plant has been thoroughly watered lift it from the jardiniere and wipe out all moisture that has drained through. This may seem like trouble, but it is not half the bother of dickering with sickly plants.

GETTING AWAY FROM WRINKLES.

Something That the Home Dressmaker Should Remember.

One of the perplexing and annoying little difficulties that beset the home dressmaker is how to avoid the wrinkles that appear under the arm, where the waist should fit perfectly smooth. In many cases these wrinkles appear because the armhole is too small, and if you find that this is the case remove the sleeve and snip the waist at the lower edge of the armhole. That the underarm seam should slant in the right direction is also important, for if it is pulled either too far forward or back it will throw out the set of the garment. The underarm seam should be at the underarm and should run parallel to the center front and the center back seam. In the case of a stout figure, where two or three underarm seams are necessary, one should be careful to get them straight.

Another point about dressmaking which often troubles the home dressmaker is the putting in of the sleeve. Start to sew the sleeve in at the inside seam of the sleeve placing a little to the front of the underarm seam. Then fit the under part of the sleeve, working the fullness as much as possible to the center of the top. Remember that the fullness must fall neither backward nor forward if you want a pretty fitting sleeve. A well-fitted sleeve fits squarely around the arm and gives a broad look to the shoulders. The fullness at the front and back should stand out from the arm.

The Toilet Table

Liquid green soap is excellent for the complexion, but it is so strong that it should not be used more than once a week.

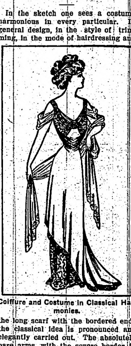
If there is a sensation of tightness after using a particular soap, it is because the soap is too drying. Another should be substituted.

Oil, in slight quantity, should be applied to the straw-dry hair to make it wave, while drying liquids will have the same effect applied to greasy hair. Five drops of oil poured on one hand, rubbed on the other, and then into the hair, will be enough when done several times a week.

ALONG THE LINES OF SEVERITY.

Classical Idea Carried Out in Harmonious Perfection.

In the sketch one sees a costume harmonious in every particular. In general design, in the style of trimming, in the mode of hairdressing and the long scarf with the bordered ends the classical idea is pronounced and elegantly carried out. The absolutely bare arms, with the severe border in classical design at the top are one of the necessary features of such a costume. A sleeve, so much as a cap, would mar the design of the whole and render it fussy. The only possible addition is the loop of tulle which is carried across like an armlet. A heavier style of wrap or one figured all over would also be incongruous. In fact, here is the perfect model for this style of costume, and it is this sort of attention to harmony which renders one costume elegant and even beautiful, whereas another is simply expensive and elaborate.



Coiffure and Costume in Classical Harmonies.

Jack Tar Suits Picturesque.

Some mothers fancy the merry little middy costumes with loose sailor blouse of navy serge over middy trousers of white linen. On the chubby laddies these little nautical togs are very fetching, indeed.

A healthful and refreshing mouth wash is made by boiling cinnamon bark in water and mixing it with equal parts of the purest alcohol. This is good both for the gums and teeth, and makes the breath more fragrant.

CURTAINS IN PRETTY DESIGNS.

Bedroom Furnishings Among the Best of Ideas Sent Out.

The new curtains for bedrooms are the prettiest imaginable. They are of heavy white net bordered with a design cut from cretonne. A set for a bedroom on exhibition showed a border simulating a running blue ribbon an inch or more wide caught at intervals with a large pink rose. This border was cut from cretonne and sewed to the net with a chain stitch. A narrow pale blue galloon finished the edges. The new madras curtains are simply exquisite. The groundwork as a rule is of a warm ecru tint, scattered with figures of floral effects in most artistic colorings. Instead of the deep border being on the bottom of the curtains it is used as a frieze, a great improvement over the old style. For libraries and dens there are madras curtains in designs that will harmonize with the furniture of such rooms, and a lovely cross bar silk (art and craft material) in soft colorings with a woven self figure which would be correct for draperies in a room furnished in mission style.

Black Scarf Worn with White Gown.

An odd fancy of the winter is the draped or floating scarf of black tulle worn with the all white gown. This scarf is edged with a band of cloth of gold or cloth of silver sewed beneath the edge so that there is just the glint of the metal. It is charmingly odd and gives a certain strong note that is becoming. It also serves in some instances to secure rather longer lines than the model of the gown or the figure of the wearer requires, but, as may be imagined, is not a fashion to be undertaken lightly by an amateur in the art of dress.

Feathers on Hat Crowns.

One of the popular devices for trimming large hats now is to use four extra thick short plumes. The stems of these are well cut off and the feathers are mounted in the center of the crown.

They fall to the brim in an immense cascade, quite covering the crown. There is no other trimming on the hat [illegible]

Chinese Pheasants Froze to Death.

A. C. Travis, who has a ranch near Irving, says seven Chinese pheasants, four roosters and three hens, have taken up their abode with his chickens about the barn and are getting as good treatment as his domestic fowls. He says he scattered seven bushels of wheat about the place for them and the quails to live on.

He also reported counting 192 of the pheasants lying in the snow in coming from his place to town. The pheasants, especially the roosters, had a hard time of it during the cold and snow. Their long tails accumulated snow, which melted with the warmth of their bodies and then froze into chunks of ice and became so heavy that with their steering apparatus out of commission they simply lay in the snow and froze or starved to death.

Facts For Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made exclusively from roots and herbs, and is perfectly harmless.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Minneapolis, Minn.:—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women, I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. Within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefits to be derived from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. John G. Moldan, 2115 Second St. North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

A Turning Point.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

Daniel Lester, professional gambler, sat on the "guard" of the Prairie Belle, plying between St. Louis and New Orleans. Lester was tired of life. Though but thirty-two years old, he saw nothing attractive in his past, present or future. His father, a Louisiana planter, had died insolvent, and his son had been thrown upon the world. In those days—the first half of the last century—gambling was not considered so debasing a profession as now, and men of otherwise irreproachable character engaged in it. Dan Lester fell in with one of these gamblers, who took a fancy to him and taught him the art.

But "blood will tell," and, though smothered in the boy, it cropped out in the man. He detested his calling. Consequently, life not seeming to him to be a paying condition, he was considering the question of ending it.

"Aren't you going to take a chance in the raffle, Lester?" asked a passenger.

"What raffle?"

"Colored girl and her boy. They belong to a young lady from Memphis on her way to New Orleans. She's short of money and wants to sell 'em. The clerk of the boat offered to get up a raffle for 'em."

Lester slowly rose from his chair and went into the cabin. There he found a young slave woman with her boy, ten years old. A blank bill of sale lay on a table ready to be filled out in the name of the winner. A number of men had gathered round, some of whom were putting down their names for chances in the raffle.

"All right," said the clerk. "We'll first throw for the gal."

Three dice were thrown three times. Whoever threw the highest number in three throws was to win the woman. A stockman won her, and she began to beg him to buy her little boy. He told her the boy would be of no use to him. Her pleadings were pathetic.

"Come, let's have the matter over with," said the clerk. "Put down your names, gentlemen, for the boy. He's to be raffled for $300 value—$50 a chance. He would be cheap at $500."

"If the winner," said Lester, "will put up the mother with the boy, making a pool for the two of $1,000, I'll take half the chances."

"Done," said the winner, who would make a profitable cash turn by the transaction.

Lester took half the chances, as he had agreed, and had one chance entered in the name of little Joe, the boy. When all was ready the owners of chances began to throw. It was agreed that Lester should open the game. Having a number of chances, he threw for each chance, his highest throw being forty-five in a possible fifty-four. The next three men threw less than he, but the last man to throw before the boy's chance came to be tested threw forty-seven.

"Come, Joe," said the clerk, "throw for yourself. There you are. If you win, your mother and you will be free."

"Gentlemen," said Lester, "I will pay each man here what he has put in for his share if I can buy them all. I propose to give the mother and child their freedom."

All the holders of chances agreed to sell except one man, a slave dealer, who insisted on holding his chance [illegible] against yours. But I want him to have the last throw."

"I don't care when I throw," said the slave dealer.

"Very well, throw now."

Lester tossed the dice on the table, the slave dealer picked them up, put them in the box and rolled them out. There were two sixes and a four. His second throw was three sixes. His last was six, five, six. He had undoubtedly won with fifty-one because to beat that the boy would have to throw within two of the highest possible number.

Again Lester took up the dice.

"What will you take for your chance?" he asked the slave dealer.

"I won't sell at any price."

"Well, then, since I am so much interested in the matter, I think I'll throw for Joe."

"Throw away. I don't care who throws."

"I do. You're an expert thrower. I've been on these boats for ten years, and I never saw a man who can roll out the fives and sixes as you can."

Lester spread his arms on the table, taking the dice box in his right hand. On the third finger of his left hand he wore an enormous seal ring. His first throw was three sixes, his second throw was three sixes, his last two sixes and a five, making in all fifty-three points and winning by one point.

The slave woman fainted, while the others gave themselves over to excitement. When Lester looked up he saw over the heads of the men sitting around the table the face of a woman. It was not only beautiful—it wore an expression of many mingled emotions combining to express appreciation to Mr. Lester for what he had done. She was the mistress of the slaves.

"What remarkable luck!" she said to him as she invited him to the ladies' cabin.

"It wasn't luck," he said, taking off his seal ring. "There is a magnet there, and the dice were loaded."

That was the last occasion on which he used the ring or any other such device. It was also a turning point in his life. He married the lady, her former slaves stayed with them, and he became a prosperous cotton broker.

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescription forces the clogged-up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home, who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disoders or Rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good Rheumatism prescrip.ions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it you want it badly. 23-25

BILL REFERRED TO JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Bill Will be Killed or Amended in Every Important Particular.

Thief River Falls' Labor and Expense All For Naught.

There is little likelihood of the bill introduced by Senator Hanson, changing the county seat law, passing either house of the legislature.

The matter was brought up in the senate Tuesday morning, the Hanson bill being reported by the towns and counties committee without recommendation. On motion of the author, the bill was then re-referred to the judiciary committee, where it will either be killed or amended in every important particular.

Thief River Falls has maintained a lobby at St. Paul all winter in the interest of the county seat and normal school bills, but so far their work has come to naught. The normal school will not go to Thief River, and it is now only a question whether it goes to Cass Lake or is not established at all, with the chances largely in favor of the latter. The county seat bill proposed by Thief River is practically killed, as the bill championed by Senator Hanson aims to provide an easy way to change county seats, to stir up trouble and cause bitter feeling and dissension in practically every county in the state. For these reasons more than three-fourths of the members of the legislature are opposed to the change.

The results of the legislative program mapped out by the Thief River promoters must be disappointing to the people of that town, especially to those who have contributed the cash to make the losing fight. They haven't even had a run for their money. Of course Dan O'Niell has had a winter's job, but even this is small compensation to the fellows who foot the bills.

On band for spring sale: One 3 horse "Boss" barrow, one 3 section steel lever harrow, one 6 foot, 16 inch Disk barrow, several Acme harrows and pulverizers. All sold at prices that will prove of interest. Call on S. A. Swanson. 27

THIEF RIVER BANK SOLD.

First National Purchased by Hanson and Patterson.

It was reported recently tnat W. W. Prichard had sold his controlling interest in the First National Bank at Thief River Falls to Aamoth Bros. of Mahnomen. That deal "fell through," but last week C. L. Hanson, president of the Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, and Daniel Patterson, who recently sold his business at St. Hilaire, purchased Mr. Prichard's interest in the Thief River bank and his other holdings in the city. Mr. Hanson will go to Thief River to take charge of the bank there, but retains his interest in the St. Hilaire bank. Mr. Prichard and family will go to the state of Washington to reside,

HAVE A NEW DRESS

The Gazette Has Purchased a Typesetting Machine and New Type.

THE GAZETTE will next week come out in a new "dress." A typesetting machine—one of those automatic contrivances that does away with hand compcsition—has been added to the printing plant. New type has been purchased to go with the machine, which accounts for the new spring finery that is to be displayed next week.

THE GAZETTE has one of the best equipped country print shops in the state of Minnesota, one that can handle anything in printing that could be desired and with the machine to facilitate the handling of the work, readers of the paper will get all "of the news all the time." No; THE GAZETTE will not publish a daily—not now— but the local field will be covered thoroughly and if you are not a subscriber to the paper you should become one.

Swanson, trustees; John Drier, Albert Brunelle and W. H. Krueger, finance committee.

SENSATIONAL MURDER AND SUICIDE

E. M. Bryant Murdered Man and Killed Himself—Bore Good Reputation.

E. M. Bryant, an operator for the Great Northern at Red Lake Falls six or seven years ago, is dead by his own hand and before taking his own life he killed O. E. Hoeper, a fellow worker in the Great Northern depot at Devils Lake, N. D. Bryant was cashier for the Great Northern and Hoeper was the company's agent. The agent had discharged Bryant for, as he stated, incompetency in handling the company's money. There had been some misunderstanding between the men and Bryant, believing that he was to lose his place, became careless in the performance of his duties, it is reported, and this led to his discharge.

Upon arriving at the depot Monday morning Bryant met the auditor who had arrived to check up his books. He greeted the auditor and then went to his desk, took out a revolver, walked over to where Hoeper was at work and shot him in the head and then shot himself. The shooting occurred at 9 o'clock and in twenty minutes Hoeper was dead. Bryant lived until 11:30, but was not conscious at any time after the shooting. It is believed that there is a shortage in Bryant's acconnt though how much truth there is in that report is not known.

Mr. Bryant was employed here as operator for about two years, being associated with Mr. Thomas. While here he bore an excellent reputation and was popular and his friends cannot conceive of him being in such a mental condition as would prompt him to commit the terrible crime. More recently he was employed at Hillsboro, N. D. J. L. Tracy, the local agent, had charge of the Hillsboro station at the time and he says that at that time Mr. Bryant was respected and popular in the town.

Funeral services over the remains of Mr. Bryant were held at Hillsboro, the home of Mrs. Bryant, yesterday. Deceased is survived by Mrs. Bryant and a little boy. The murdered man, Mr. Hoeper, was twenty-seven years old and was married.

Two shots were fired. The first shot did not strike the man's body. The second charge entered the right eye and lodged in the brain and death was instantaneous.

There will be a farmers' institute at the Lillo creamery on Saturday, March 20. Several speakers, authorities on various branches of farm work—dairying, stock raising, care of crops, etc.—will deliver addresses. It will be well worth the time of any farmer to attend the meeting.

The Crow Indian Fair.

On the banks of the Litte Big Horn river, out in Montana, the harvest season marks the recurrence each year of the annual Crow Indian fair. This fair is unique in being the only one Indian in management and participation. Worthy of note, too, is the fact that for a pure, wholesome table beverage nothing can equal golden grain belt beer. Keen appetite comes with its use and it removes indigestion. Have it on the home table at all times. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex. Thompson, Crookston.

Extracts from

J. J. Hill's Speech

and his Experience as a Farmer

"Many of you will remember, when your fields were new, the yield per acre of wheat was about twenty-five or thirty bushels, and in some cases we have seen it run up to over forty, and the man who got less than twenty thought he had at least a partial failure. The entire crop of this country shows yield of about fourteen bushels—a little less, 13.88 bushels. You know that with you and me and everybody who does not do all his own work with his own hands, labor costs us more than it did; we know it costs us more to live than it did. How is the farmer going to make his profit, on a constantly decreasing yield, from the cultivation of his land?

The Soil, once fertile, is now rapidly being deteriorated.

"Here we have climate and soil, our climate gives enough moisture to give us a reasonably certain growth of vegetation. Our soil, once fertile, is now rapidly being deterioated, run down; people say that land wears out. Stop a moment and think what would become of the human race if the land wore out, like an old garment, or an old pair of shoes, and had to be cast aside. We would all die within a generation.

"The land does not wear out. The mother earth that bears us all is kindly and patient, but she cannot give the yield unless she is taken care of intelligently. Now it becomes every man here, whether he lives in the city or in the town or in the country, at the four corners or at one corner, to see that the man on the land is not only doing justice to himself, but that he is doing justice to the land: is not only doing justice to himself but he is doing justice to the earth that bore him. Otherwise we will have nothing to fall back on.

Red River Valley Experience in Fertalizing Land

"I have a farm in the Red River Vally; I asked my farmer last year, for I farm by proxy, to save every particle of manure and put it on the land as far as it would go, and he was able to do a good job on ninety acres. That ninety acres yielded a little over 35 bushels to the acre, and the entire field of 2,000 acres of that farm yielded about 16. Most of my neighbors got from 8 to 12. Now, if they had the fertility, if they had the wherewith to fertilize that land, they could do just as well as I did, and if we could double our crop, which we certainly could do we would derive the greatest benefit that we could from all the establishments that can be built within the state."

You can utilize the fertilizer on your farm to best advantage if you use a

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

REVIEW OF THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE STATE LEGISLATORS FOR THE WEEK.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—Arguments for and against the location of the Armour packing plant at New Brighton were delivered yesterday afternoon at a public hearing given by the house committee on public health. The representatives from St. Paul argued that the location of the plant on the site proposed would cause great damage to the city. Minneapolis advocates claimed that with a modern plant, such as Armour intended to build, there would be no offensive odors. The whole afternoon was taken up listening to the arguments.

That six of the thirteen members of the judiciary committee who voted to kill the initiative and referendum bill gave written pledges before election to work and vote for such a measure was the charge Representative Johnson made yesterday before the house in the discussion which preceded the killing of his bill. The rules were suspended in a flood of other bills, and the bill was passed with a rush, only one vote being cast against it. MINNESOTA WHEAT WINS.

Takes One First and Two Seconds in World's Contest at Omaha.

Minnesota men raised wheat which took one first and two seconds in the baking test, open to all the world, held under the auspices of the recent corn and grain exposition at Omaha.

Samples of wheat were sent to mills in Minneapolis and to other laboratories, and after being ground flour was made. Minnesota took first in the pastry flour class and second in the baking flour and second in cracker flour. The first in the pastry class was taken from eighty-four entries.

L. Lamberson of Marshall county was the raiser of the wheat awarded first prize in the pastry flour class. John Cheney of Marshall county was second in the bread flour class, and J. W. Beckman of Wright county took second in cracker flour. The wheat was marked on yield of flour, absorption, soundness and flavor of the bread and the quality of gluten.

W. D. Stalk of Nebraska took first in the bread flour, with Iowa and Colorado men third and fourth. The winner of the cracker flour was Ernest L. Hughes of Missouri, with an Iowa man third. Colorado played second fiddle to Minnesota in the pastry flour contest.

ROADS EARN LESS.

Earnings in 1907 $10,000,000 Greater Than in 1908.

The railroads in Minnesota lost heavily in gross earnings last year as compared with 1907. There was a shrinkage of over $10,000,000 in the total earnings of the roads in the state.

The Great Northern leads the list in the gross earnings. In 1908 the road earned $19,659,762.71, while in 1907 the gross earnings were $22,952,896.92. The taxes for 1908 amounted to $785,990.51, which is over $200,000 above the nearest competitor, the Northern Pacific, which pays $532,988.09 on its gross earnings of $13,324,702.35.

In 1907 the Northern Pacific's total earnings were $14,436,563.28, and its taxes $577,462.53.

The Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul is the third road in the matter of earnings. The road earned $10,228,510.39 in 1908, but in the preceding year it showed a decrease of $1,000,000.

State Gets a Million.

The state treasurer received more than a million dollars, as follows: Northern Pacific, taxes for 1908, $532,988.09; Great Northern, main line taxes, $374,987.76; branch lines, $286,006.89; Minnesota & International railway, taxes, $26,740.07; insurance companies of the state, taxes, $50,000; Northern Express company, $5,067.10.

MINNESOTA LAND GOOD VALUE.

Average Per Acre, Not Including Town Lots, Is $14.08.

The average value of the 41,331,288.85 acres of Minnesota land during the year of 1908 was $14.08. The number of acres does not include town lots. The value of the land is estimated as $582,030,504. Town lots were valued at $316,963,277, while the figures on the personal property were $166,016,420. This gives a total value of $1,065,010,201, on which the rate of taxation was 26.98 mills.

The university and school fund amounts to $1,809,946.75. County revenue on the taxes reached $3,134,612.25, while the revenue on the city and village taxes, $4,416,914.88. School district taxes, on the local 1 mill basis, totaled $1,054,849.48.

Patent Office Models.

There are 157,000 models in the patent office which are about to be lodged in the National museum. Many of them are of historic interest. They will be under the care of the commissioner of patents.

TAKES UP CAUSE OF MILLERS.

Railroad Commission Asks to Intervene in Lake-and-Rail Hearing.

The railroad and warehouse commission took a very important step when it prepared and forwarded a petition to the interstate commerce commission asking for the right to intervene in behaf of the milling and grain-growing industry of the state in the pending action between the flour millers and the railroad and steamship companies to reduce the lake-and-rail rate on flour.

In 1900 the lake-and-rail rate on flour and wheat from Minnesota to New York was nearly equal. Since that time the rate on flour has materially increased. This has resulted in the building up of immense milling industries at Buffalo, New York and other Eastern points. These mills are taking a large supply of the hard spring wheat grown in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, mixing it with inferior grades and grinding it into flour in New York and selling the product in Eastern markets as Minnesota flour at prices that are ruinous to the Minnesota mills.

Last year these mills used 50,000,000 bushels of our wheat. That the competition of the Eastern mills is greatly injurious to those of this state is proved by the fact that our export shipment has fallen off 50 per cent since 1900. That the Minnesota mills ground 1,250,000 bushels less in 1907 than in 1900, and in 1900 the Minneapolis mills exported 31.11 per cent of the total shipment, and in 1907 it had fallen to 17.19 per cent. The high rate on flour is a discrimination against Minnesota mills, and was made and is maintained to favor Eastern millers. If this rate is continued the milling industry of Minnesota will eventually be transferred to the East and then the wheat market will be fixed at New York. It is evident that the removal of competition and the changing of the natural Minnesota market to New York will tend to reduce the price of wheat to the producer. Realizing the vast importance of this question to the millers and grain growers of this state, the commission thought it necessary to apply for the right to be heard in this case. The hearings will be heard before the interstate commerce commission in Minneapolis in March. The result will be eagerly watched by the millers and grain producers of the state.

PROTECT LAND OF INDIANS.

Urged That Department of Justice Sue Minnesota.

The commissioner of Indian affairs has been requested to urge the department of justice to bring suit against the state of Minnesota to protect the lands belonging to the Indians in the new county of Mahnomen. Facts laid before the Indian commissioner by Attorney C. B. Richardson, resident attorney for the White Earth Indians, show a serious condition to exist in Minnesota, which threatens many of the Indians with the loss of valuable allotments of farming lands.

William Madison of Beaulieu, representing the aged chief May-zhuc-ke-geship of the Chippewas, declares that the state is levying taxes against the lands of the Indians, title to which is held in trust by the government and which should be free from taxation. He says that the Indians were entirely unprepared for such action; that they have no money to meet the taxes, and that they are completely at a loss to know what to do.

Meantime land men have come in among the Indians, he says, and are convincing them that the state will take their land away from them May 1 for taxes and that the best thing they can do is to sell for whatever they can get. In some cases the Indians have partly agreed to sell their valuable farms for $190 to $200, it is claimed.

Attorney Richardson submitted a brief to the Indian commissioner recently and requested immediate action to protect the Indians through the department of justice. He declares that the titles to the land of the full-blood Indians remained in the government and that the state had no right to tax them; that many of the mixed bloods had not secured full patents to their land, and that, therefore, their property is also not taxable by the state.

"Unless the relief suggested can be afforded," said Mr. Richardson, "the titles to many of the allotments will be clouded and in a majority of cases the peacable Indian will simply lie down and let the tax title shark walk over him."

Goat's $15,000 Meal.

A peasant followed by a goat walked into the local bank at Aurillac to pay in some money. As he was going out a clerk noticed that the goat had a piece of paper in his mouth.

He vaulted over the counter and caught the animal just in time to prevent it swallowing a bond worth 3,000 pounds which it had nibbled off the counter.

As a wealth producer the milk and dairy products of this country is five times the value of the wheat crop and twice the value of the corn crop, according to W. W. Wall, secretary of the dairy and food department. "The United States consumes over 9,000,000,000 gallons of milk annually, or a supply of 100 gallons of milk for every man, woman and child in the country," he said. This represents, including milk, butter and cheese, a value of $2,500,000,000, which is nearly one-fifteenth of the total wealth of the nation.

It is interesting to see what this amount of money would do. One-half of this sum would be sufficient to cancel the interest-bearing debt of the United States, pay for the construction of the Panama canal and then build fifty battleships.

In 1907 the product of 546,595 cows in Minnesota sent to the creameries produced 87,044,780 pounds of butter. If the remainder, 493,505 cows had contributed to the creameries the production of butter would have been 137,000,000 pounds.

What Government Experts and Other Prominent Writers Say on Agriculture and Allied Topics.

METHODS OF PROPAGATING SELECTED ALFALFA PLANTS

Three Lines of Procedure Which May Be Followed—By G. F. Freeman, Kansas Agricultural College.

After a careful study of the characters of many individual plants, certain ones will be selected as worthy of future tests and further propagation. Three lines of procedure are offered:

1. The selected plants may be allowed to seed in the open and these seed be harvested and planted in test-rows, subsequent selections being made from each test-row. This method has been fully described by Wheeler and Balz, in Bulletin 101, South Dakota, as follows:

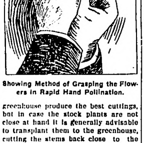
"In the breeding of alfalfas the seed from various sources is sown in selection rows, each row representing a single source of South Dakota accession number. The rows are three feet apart and each plant occupies one foot of row. One hundred or more plants are grown in each row. From the selection rows the best appearing individuals from the best original sources are selected and marked by numbered stakes. The seed from these plants is saved separately and sown the next season in centgener or pedigree rows. The plants in these rows are grown the same as in the selection rows. The difference between the selection and pedigree rows is simply in the source of the seed; selection rows are from single regional sources, while pedigree rows are from single plants selected from selection rows or from older pedigree rows. Pedigree rows are known as first, second or third generation pedigree rows, respectively, as to whether they are one, two or three selected generations from the original selection row.

Low, Spreading Habit.

"On account of the labor involved no attention has been given, so far, to isolating the plants by covering or other means to prevent contamination from foreign pollen. Whether more rapid progress in improvement can be made by this method than by the open method has not, therefore, been demonstrated."

2. Vegetative propagation. By this method, which is described and advocated by Westgate and Oliver in Bulletin 102, part 4, bureau of plant industry, United States department of agriculture, from any given selected mother plant large numbers of individuals may be secured by vegetative propagation. They say:

"The cuttings should be made about three inches in length, preferably from the upper portions of reasonably matured stems. Plants grown outside the greenhouse produce the best cuttings, but in case the stock plants are not close at hand it is generally advisable to transplant them to the greenhouse, cutting the stems back close to the ground. The slips should be inserted in sand, and when the largest roots are about three-fourths of an inch in length they should be transferred to two-inch pots and later to three-inch pots. The size which the plants can attain in such pots without becoming pot-bound will permit them to be transplanted to the permanent nursery rows, if the season be suitable, or to an outside cold-frame to remain dormant until spring, in case the cuttings are made during the winter. It is possible, with 30 square feet of greenhouse space and 90 square feet of cold-frame, ot secure during a single winter 1,000 plants from an alfalfa plant of medium size."



Showing Method of Grasping the Flowers in Rapid Hand Pollination.

3. Propagation by means of close-pollinated seed. The method advocated by Westgate and Oliver has many advantages where the rapid propagation of proved superior plants is desired. In the work of the Kansas station, however, it has ben found that the first and most important question as regards the value of a promising mother plant is as to how many of, and to what degree, its promising characters are transmitted to its offspring. Now these facts cannot be learned from the plants arising from cuttings, since each of these is but a separated part of the original plant and would therefore bear all of its characters. In order, therefore, to test the hereditary characters of a plant, and these are the only ones worth while in the originating of improved races of plants, it is necessary that they be propagated from close-pollinated seed. It requires at least two generations from close-pollinated seed to fully determine the hereditary potency of a mother plant, the fact as to whether or not it was itself a hybrid, and the extent to which its offspring will be variable. Moreover, according to the already recognized laws of heredity, plants which have bred true for two generations from close-pollinated seed may be considered as fixed to that type. Until, therefore, we are sure of the purity and the hereditary ability to transmit characters of economic value of a selected plant, it must be propagated from seed and not allowed to be contaminated by foreign pollen.

This inability of alfalfa to freely set seed without the aid of insects or hand pollination is caused by the peculiar shape, structure and nature of the flower. Even after the flower is open the pollen-bearing stamens and the stigma on which the pollen must fall are rolled up tightly in the keel or lower petal of the flower. Now, in order to set seed, it has been shown that these organs must be released from the keel and the stigma somewhat irritated. Insects accomplish this by alighting on the keel in their search for nectar in the flower. The weight of the insect's body bursts the keel and allows the pollen to be thrown out. At the same time the stigma on being released springs upward, striking the lower part of the insect, and receives upon its now irritated and receptive surface pollen which has previously dusted on the insect's body. Now, this same thing can be done artificially by pressing upon the keel with a toothpick, the point of a dull knife, or other suitable instrument. By this method the number of flowers pollinated may be counted and recorded and the seeding ability of a plant determined, but where a large amount of seed is wanted and it is necessary to hand-pollinate several hundred plants the method is too slow; still, after a little practice, one person can pollinate 10,000 flowers a day.

However, where it is desired to pollinate many flowers rapidly, without reference to the exact number concerned, another and more rapid method may be followed. A flower-cluster, when in full bloom, is taken between the thumb and the first and second fingers, and subjected to a light pressure, while at the same time it is slightly rolled. By this operation the keels of all the flowers which are in the proper stage will be made to burst, setting free the stamens and pistils and covering the stigmas with pollen.

FEEDS FOR POULTRY

By Prof. W. R. Graham.

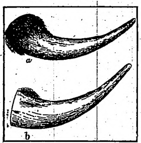
I have seen eggs produced from all kinds of grain. One man naturally favors wheat, another corn. A great many dislike corn, and say it is a bad feed. Corn is undoubtedly good if fed properly. If you give a hen a change she will balance her own ration, but in the feeding of meat we are meeting a very difficult problem. The price of beef scrap has gone up 25 cents a hundred in the last year, simply because of the demand. There does not seem to be any other food that takes its place. I prefer green cut bone when I can get it fresh cut to-day and feed it to-morrow. In the winter, if frozen hard, it will be all right. I think there is no material that will produce eggs better. The next best thing is to use butchers' refuse, and then beef scrap. The great advantages with beef scrap are that it is always convenient and always ready, and it saves time. Of course, it is much more concentrated than is green cut bone.

BEST METHODS OF DEHORNING CATTLE

Clean, Sharp Meat Saw and Strong Rope the Only Equipment Needed—By Richard W. Hickman, V. M. D., Chief of Quarantine Division.

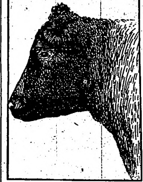
Dehorning with Saw, Cow's Head Snubbed to Stanchion Rail.

The dehorning of partly developed and adult cattle can be very satisfactorily performed without other apparatus or instruments than a good strong clothesline and a clean, sharp meat saw—or a miter saw with a rigid back—in the hands of a fairly good mechanic. The same simple means for controlling the animal is just as applicable when the dehorning knife is to be used as when the horns are to be removed with the saw. This consists in securing the head of the animal to the horizontal rail or stringpiece which holds the upper ends of the stanchion boards. The animal is put in the stanchion in the usual manner; then one end of a heavy clothesline is passed around the upper part of the neck and tied in a knot that will not slip, otherwise it will choke the animal. The free end of the rope is now carried between the horns, through the stanchion to the front, up and over the horizontal stanchion rail, then down underneath the neck and up and over the top of the stanchion rail to an assistant, who should hold it firmly. Now release the stanchion, allowing the animal to withdraw its head, so that the horns are just inside of the stanchion rail or stringpiece; then, keeping the rope tight, pass it once around the muzzle, up and over the stanchion rail, and through to the front again to the hands of the assistant, who should stand three or four feet in front of the animal and hold the rope firmly, but prepared to release it when told to do so by the operator. The animal is now ready for the dehorning operation.



Horns Showing (a) Proper and (b) Improper Cutting.

It is necessary that the rope be held by an assistant, as in the event of the animal struggling during the operation so as to throw itself off its feet, or if there appears to be danger of its choking, the rope may be slackened promptly at the word of the operator and the animal partly released. This, however, is rarely necessary, for as soon as the head is secured the operator should be ready, standing at the right shoulder of the animal with his saw, and proceed to saw off first the right and then the left horn. The horns should be severed at a point from a quarter to a half-inch below where the skin joins the base of the horn, cutting from the back toward the front. Our illustration shows the animal and the operator in position for the dehorning operation by this method. It is a good plan before commencing the real work to experiment upon an animal in the matter of control by snubbing the head to the stanchion rail as described.

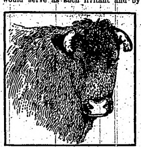


Head of Steer Showing Result of Proper Dehorning.

If the stanchion rail is too wide to permit of properly securing the lower part as well as the upper part of the animal's head, the turn of the rope around the muzzle may be omitted and the last lap of the rope carried around the stanchion rail to the front and to the hands of the asistant. The rope should pass each time over the neck of the animal to the stanchion rail so that the laps are between the horns, in order that the rope may not interfere with the work of the saw.

There are men in what are known as the milk districts adjacent to large cities, where large numbers of dairy cows abound, who go about from farm to farm dehorning animals in this manner, charging for their services in some instances as little as five cents per horn or ten cents per animal.

It is not usual to apply any preparation after the operation of dehorning to prevent bleeding, as the loss of blood is not sufficient, as a rule, to be of consequence. Care should be taken, however, to prevent substances from getting into the openings left after the horns are removed. The horn cores are elongations of the frontal bones of the skull, and are hollow. They communicate with the frontal sinuses, or air spaces, of the head; therefore foreign substances which would act as an irritant in these cavities are apt to set up an inflammation, resulting in the formation of pus or an abscess, which may prove quite serious. Fragments of horn detached in the process of dehorning would serve as such irritant and by their presence in these cavities cause inflammation. This trouble, though, is of infrequent occurrence, but would appear more liable to happen when the dehorning instruments are used, on account of their tendency to crush, especially in the case of old animals, whereas the saw cuts clean. If proper care is taken, however, such an occurrence following dehorning may in almost every instance be avoided.



Head of Steer Showing Bad Appearance Caused by Improper Dehorning.

Occasionally animals after being dehorned and turned out of the stable will rub their heads against a dirt or gravel bank or the rough bark of a tree, and foreign material may thus get into the cavities, though usually the soreness of the parts is sufficient to prevent this.

If the animals are dehorned when flies are about, it is well to apply some pine tar with a view to keeping flies from the wounds. Some operators do this in nearly all cases, thinking that it facilitates healing. The dehorning operation should always, when possible, be performed in cool weather, and upon animals which have at least attained the age of two years.

Ashes Have Value.—Some people tell us to burn all the refuse left in the garden. This is all right provided you keep the ashes upon the soil. Do not let them blow away after the bonfire.

Book Farming.—A great deal of fun has been made of book farming, but people are beginning to recognize its value. The agricultural colleges and short courses have changed the general public estimate.

Good Germs.—All bacteria are not harmful. Although the majority of the ills effecting man and beast come from germs, this does not prove that there are not healthful germs as well.

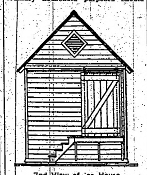
Must Be Kept Dry.—Sheep may not need as warm a stable as some other classes of stock, but it is absolutely necessary that they should be protected from the dampness.

Makes Better Butter.—The cream should not be held long after it is ready to churn.

STILL ANOTHER PLAN FOR A FARM ICE HOUSE

Designed by Canadian Agricultural Experts—Milkroom Made Part of Ice House.

The increasing recognition of the necessity of cooling milk and cream, whether for delivery to creamery, cheese factory, condensary or for distribution to consumers in a near-by town or shipment to a more distant city, makes the subject of farm icehouses of great importance. These do not need to be expensive affairs and the convenience of having ice for the ordinary household purposes should lead every farmer, who can do so, to study this question more closely than ever before.

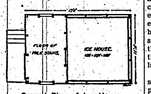


End View of Ice House.

To aid in such study we copy from a Canadian bulletin the illustrations and explanation which follows:

Roughly speaking, ten pounds of ice are equal in cooling power to 100 pounds of cold water. Thus 100 pounds of water containing ten pounds of ice will do as much cooling as 200 pounds of the same water. Or, in other words, the use of ice in the water surrounding the milk may do away with the necessity for changing it. The same advantage applies in the case of using a special milk cooler. The ice can be placed in the receptacle which contains the supply of water for the cooler.

To utilize the ice for household purposes in connection with an arrangement of this kind, it would be necessary to provide an insulated ice box in which to put articles of food along with a quantity of ice from time to time. A simple arrangement, which will give good satisfaction is to make a box in the shape of a trunk or chest, lined with galvanized iron, and divided in the center by a partition open at the top and bottom to allow for a circulation of air between the two compartments. The ice can be placed in one side of the partition and the articles of food on the other side. A box constructed as follows will give good satisfaction: One layer of matched boards covered with one inch of hair felt and finished with another layer of inch boards. That is to say, the sides, top and bottom will consist of two-ply of matched boards with one layer of one-inch hair felt between. The cover should fit tightly and be provided with a cushion of some kind to make it airtight. The galvanized iron lining is necessary to prevent the dampness from affecting the wood and destroying the insulation. It is necessary to provide a drainage pipe for the melting ice, and the outlet should be trapped to prevent passage of air. If hair felt cannot be procured easily, leave a space of three or four inches between the outside and the inside finish of the box and fill this space with planing mill shavings or thoroughly dry saw-dust.



Ground Plan of Ice House.

A cubic foot of ice weighs 57½ pounds. One ton of solid ice measures, approximately, 35 cubic feet. A consumption of two cubic feet (115 pounds) per day for four months would amount to nearly seven tons. Allowing for the waste when such a comparatively small body of ice is stored, a building ten feet square and ten feet high will afford ample space for that quantity of ice, if it is carefully packed.

Fifty pounds per day for four months would amount to three tons. Allowing for waste, a solid block of ice six feet square and six feet high should be sufficient if properly stored.

For the purpose of estimating the weight of ice roughly by the number of blocks, the following table will be found convenient:

5 blocks 18x36 in., 20 in. thick equal 1 ton

1 Provide for drainage by filling the area of the icehouse with broken stones or cobble stones, covered with cinders or gravel. A few inches will do on the top of a gravelly and porous soil. On a heavy clay soil a greater depth will be necessary. A tile drain should be laid in the earth, under the gravel, along the center of the building.

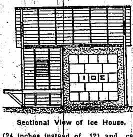
2. Lay 2x6-inch sills, double, and binding at corners, or one sill 8x8 feet, on posts. Set up 2x6-inch studs at 24-inch centers topped with 2x6-inch plates, double. Sheet the outside of the studs with matched siding. Line the inside with rough boards, as well as the under side of the rafters. Leave space between studs empty.

Have doors in sections running up from the sill to the gable at one end of the icehouse.

3. Before putting in the ice cover the stones or gravel in the icehouse with 12 inches of dry saw-dust.

4. Pack the ice directly on the saw-dust. Leave a space of 12 inches between the walls and the ice. Place the cakes of ice as close together as possible, and fill in all unavoidable spaces with crushed ice or snow, well rammed. Never use any saw-dust between the tiers.

5. Fill the 12-inch space between the ice and the wall with dry saw-dust. Be careful that the saw-dust does not contain any ice chips or snow. When no saw-dust is available, cut hay or cut straw, or chaff, may be used, but in this case the space between the wall and the ice should be twice as large (24 inches instead of 12) and care should be taken to have the hay or straw packed as well as possible.



Sectional View of Ice House.

6. Cover the ice on top with saw-dust or long hay; 12 inches of saw-dust will do. Hay should be put on two feet thick. Hay and saw-dust make an equally good covering, if used in proper quantities.

When saw-dust is used, put on two feet thick at first. This will leave 12 inches to spare to fill in the sides in the spring, when the saw-dust along the sides has settled.

7. A loft floor over the icehouse does more harm than good, as it prevents circulation of air and keeps the covering damp. Have an opening at each end of the gable fitted with louvre boards, and have a ventilator 18 inches square going through the middle of the roof to create a thorough circulation of air and thus prevent accumulation of heat under the roof.

8. Bank the icehouse up above the sill with earth or saw-dust, in order to prevent any entrance of air around the sill.

THE BUSY BEE IN BUSINESS

By George E. Hilton, President Bee Keepers' Association.

It may seem a little unusual to measure bees by the bushel, but it is interesting, nevertheless, to record the fact that there are not less than two and a quarter million bushels of bees at work in the United States at the present time, sipping nectar from the corolla of the flowers and fruit blossoms for the benefit of the sweets-loving. Bees are not usually sold in bushel lots, nor even figured after that unit of measurement, but Dr. E. F. Phillips of the bureau of entomology of the United States department of agriculture recently made the mathematical deduction possible. He says: "I have been taking a bee census to the best of my ability, and have determined the number to be approximately 385,250,000,000. I get that result by multiplying the 6,450,000; estimating 45,000 as the proper population of a healthy colony, I figure that a dozen quarts of bees would make 45,000."

If the doctor's estimate is correct, the commercially active bees in the United States would weigh 90,000,000 pounds at 40 pounds to the bushel.

That is enough to fill 3,000 freight cars carrying 15 tons or make a train long enough to reach from Baltimore to Washington. Some bees, beyond a shadow of doubt.

The result of the labor of these bees may be better understood when the astounding fact is stated that though the past season in some parts of the United States was a bad one for honey owing to climatic conditions, the crop was fully 250,000,000 pounds—worth at the very low average wholesale price of ten cents a pound, the huge sum of $25,000,000. The stupendous numbers here recorded would not be possible without the greatest activity on the part of the busy queens, but they are most ardent in their resistance to race suicide, and some of the most prolific ones are now capable of laying 4,500 eggs in 24 hours, and will continue that tremendous output for months at a time. The records of the office over which Dr. Phillips presides instances one queen's output at 1,200 eggs a day for four years.

The best estimates obtainable by the National Bee Keepers' association, which cover the United States and Canada, show that there are at the present time in these two countries 500,000 bee keepers, with an average output of money and wax valued at $50,000,000.

VALETS FOR ALL AT OXFORD

Life Too Easy There, in the Opinion of Griffen, a Student From Missouri.

Morrison Beall Giffen, a Missouri college union scholar at the University of Missouri last year and now a Rhoades scholar at Oxford, has written an interesting letter to the head of the Cosmopolitan club in Columbia, of which he was a charter member and the first chairman.

Mr. Giffen says that during the last two months he has been kept busy preparing for an examination which he must take before the Christmas holidays.

Oxford has a peculiar system of examination. There are three examinations only during the entire course, one for entrance, one in the middle of the course and one at the end.

Life is very easy at Oxford—perhaps too easy—thinks Giffen. There are servants for everything. A day's program begins at 7:30 o'clock in the morning when a servant wakes the student and gets his bath ready. Breakfast is brought into the room at 8:30 o'clock.

From 9 o'clock to noon the student is supposed to study. At 1 o'clock, a light lunch is brought into his room. At 2 o'clock he goes out for physical exercise and may not return until about 5. Then comes the afternoon tea, to which one usually invites a friend.

Dinner is served at 7 o'clock in the common diningroom, where students and teachers dine together. The place in which Giffen has dinner is a big fine room with a high ceiling. The sides are paneled in oak and hung with the portraits of ancient benefactors of the college. The silver used at the table is from fifty to three hundred years old. After dinner the students usually go out to amuse themselves.

Giffen will spend his Christmas holidays in Germany.

LED CHARITY BALL

At the nineteenth annual German charity ball, which was held in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, more than $12,000 were obtained for German charities in the city, making a total of $180,000 from this source. The entire first floor of the hotel and the Fifth avenue restaurants were reserved for the ball and decorated with smilax and palms.

There was music by three orchestras, and after the grand march it was continuous. Harry T. Eschwege, president of the joint committees for 1908, led the grand march with Mrs. Francis Draz. Mrs. Draz wore a gown of orchid satin made in Empire style, Grecian drapery of embroidered chiffon in ostrich feathers in pastel shades of orchid, maize and sea green. At the corsage she wore a garniture of jeweled bands and opal pendants, and her sleeves in silver fringe.

WHAT IS A "SKALD?"

In Old Scandinavian Days He Was a Poet and Bard.

Charles Rann Kennedy, who gives the readiest of good humored attention to inquiries concerning his dramas, has been somewhat puzzled to discover our American unacquaintance with Icelandic lore. In "The Winterfeast" the word skald, descriptive of the hero, for example, which an Englishman would doubtless place at once, sounded quite foreign to many ears and was sometimes not recognized at all.

To say that it means a singer of verses is less impressive than to say that it is no more or less than the Scandinavian equivalent for the Celtic "bard," the latter a word all would recognize, and that it is not mere Scandinavian, but simply good English. "Thrall," too, in itself obviously suggesting some one in bondage, was apparently not quite at home in our American vocabulary.

Horrors of Minstrelsy.

Bones—Mistah Walkah, kin yo' tell me w'y a waud caucus am like a valise?

Bones—'Cause yo' most jin'ly packs it afo' yo' carries it.

Interlocutor—Ladies and gentlemen, Sig. Jarr de Roofoff, the eminent and popular basso, will now sing the touching ballad, "Think of the Microbes on a Street Car Strap!"

Indispensable.

"But," protested the philanthropist, "you should try to be of some use in the world."

"Ain't I de useful chap?" queried the tramp. "Wot'd dem jokesmiths do widout me, huh?"

Substantial.

Tom—I ate of the cake she made just to make mself solid.

Dick—Did you succeed?

Tom—I couldn't feel any more solid if I had eaten concrete or building stone.

Wasted Advice.

"It's the little things that count. Don't be a grump. Compliment your wife on her new hat when you go home to-night."

"My wife ain't got any new hat," responded the other party to the sidewalk conversation, with a rueful smile.

A Campaign Year.

"Whither are we drifting?" demanded the grocery orator.

"Toward the codfish barrel," unexpectedly answered the proprietor. "But tain't no use, boys. That barrel was cleaned out durin' the debate last night."

Rather Ambiguous.

When Weber and Fields were playing together a couple of husky Western visitors, seeing New York for the first time, dropped into the Weberfield Museum of Drama to see the show.

"Which is Weber and which is Fields?" asked one, who forgot what a programme was for.

"Derned if I know," replied the other. "But whichever is which, I'd rather be the other one."

Sure of Her Ground.

Mistress—Jane, I saw the milkman kiss you this morning. In the future I will take the milk in.

Jane—'Twouldn't be no use, mum. He's promised never to kiss anybody but me.

Gadzooks, No!

"What do you mean?"

"We don't say, 'Marry, come up' any more."

ONE of the funniest things about a boy is that mother never has to call him twice to get out of bed on Saturday morning.

THE undesirable citizen, the Ananias, the nature faker, the mollycoddle and the muckraker can go ahead with the jollification.

A LEGISLATIVE re-apportionment is not considered as among the possibilities at this session. Northern Minnesota will continue to suffer.

The North Dakota legislature adjourned last Friday. The session lasts only sixty days over there and yet the people seem to get all the law they need.

A STATE land sale will be held at Red Lake Falls on June 11. It will not be a large sale, as most of the state land in this county has been sold at previous sales.

THE most remarkable feature of the normal school proposition is the shifting nature of the center of population. At present there are either five centers or it changes base several times every day.

THE big packing plants utilize every part of the hog except the squeal and the stench, and when the latter is disposed of in some by-product St. Paul can offer no objection to the New Brighton site.

UNCLE ISAAC STEPHENSON has finally won his fight for re-election as senator in Wisconsin. Isaac is a modern politician. He pays the money and insists on delivery of the goods. The interests of the people do not worry statesmen of that stripe.

CAPT. JOHN TAPPER, who came to this region before the name of Minnesota had ever been suggested and who helped to build the first house on the site of Minneapolis, died last week at the home of his son at Villard, Minn. He was born in England in 1720.

A CLERGYMAN in an English town warned his hearers lately "not to walk in a slippy path, lest they be sucked, maelstrom-like, into its meshes!" This metaphor suggests that of another clergyman, who prayed that the word might be as a nail driven in a sure place, sending its roots downward and its branches upward.

IT'S a good guess that the sixth normal will not be established at this session of the legislature. A good many members are obligated to Cass Lake in one way or another, but as soon as the big cities and other important interersets get their chestnuts pulled out of the fire they will be ready to drop Cass Lake and allow the problem to go over to the next session.

"THE milk and dairy products of this country are five times the value of the wheat crop and twice the value of the corn crop," said W. W. Wall, secretary of the dairy and food department, "The United States consumes more than nine billion gallons of milk annually, or a supply of 100 gallons of milk for every man, woman and child in the country. This represents, including milk, butter and cheese, a value of $2,200,000. 'Bossie' is certainly doing her part in adding to the national wealth. Even the barn yard hen brings more money to the farmer than his wheat fields.

WHEN Teddy is on the job as editor of the Outlook, the foreman will probably telephone: "Hello! Type foundry? Send us 10,000 cap I's to spell 'I am it' with; 10 quarts of dashes and asterisks, 23 crates of shorter and uglier words, one-half in caps, one-fourth in italics, the rest assorted; also 500 stock cuts used by patent medicine men and firearm venders.

THE Greenbush Tribune endoses the position taken by the GAZETTE and other papers on the question of county agricultural schools. It would no doubt be much better to have elementary training in agriculture in our state high schools and then have fewer and better agricultural colleges located in differnt parts of the state. This would result in better instrnction, better equipment and a saving in the end to each pupil attending.

RALPH WHEELOCK, in Pioneer Press: James J. Hill says there will be no appreciable impovement in business conditions this year and Judge Gary intimates that if the tariff is taken off of steel wages in that industry will be cut. But the wealth producing farmers of the Northwest, who make possible railroad prosperity and good wages, are going right ahead in preparation for another record-breaking crop. So we may all be happy yet.

THE Fargo Forum gives this excellent advice: "Never forget that you are a part of the town and that your deportment helps to make up the stranger's estimate of the place. Sell all you can and buy all you can at home. Every dollar that is sent or carried away from home makes the town that much poorer. If you have the means invest in something that will give somebody employment. Do not kick at proposed improvement simply because it is not at you door."

THE people of St. Paul are very much opposed to the establishment of the big Armour packing plant at New Brighton, which is seven miles from the Capital building, says the Adrian Democrate. They fear the stench would detract perceptibly from the joys of existence in the saintly city. But from where we sit it seems that they are unnecessarily perturbed. A packing plant does not exhale atter of roses, to be sure, but, at a distance of seven miles, the most sensitive proboscis will not be offended if the plant is kept reasonably clean. Besides, there is already such a multiplicity of odors in St. Paul that the addition of one more will not be noticed.

THERE are approximately 10,000 unemployed men in Duluth, Minneapolis and St. Paul, about 2,000 in Duluth, 3,500 in St. Paul and 4,500 in Minneapolis, and there is little or no work for them to do in the big cities, says the St. Cloud Times. The above are the findings and conclusions of the heads of the various charitable, relief and employment organizations of the Twin Cities, who met Saturday at the state capital with Labor Commissioner W. E. McEwen, to discuss what can be done for the unemployed man. It was decided that it would be impossible to find employment for the army of unemployed in the cities. It would have to be on railroad works, or farms, or in the woods. The matter of securing railroad transportation and sending the unemployed eleswhere, was discussed, but it was regarded as not promising satisfactory results. The fact is that the army of the unemployed, especially at this season of the year, is found to have large numbers in every city.

THE action of the state senate in refusing to give the people a voice in the selection of United States senators because Governor Johnson might be elected shows how easily partisanship has a higher claim than partriotism on the average legislator. It would seem to the average citizen with judgment unbiased by party chains that the people should be allowed to choose whomsoever they please. To be entirely consistent, the legislature should propose an amendment giving the solons power to choose the governor and other officials. This plan would please the pin-heads admirably, unless, alack! the voters should take it into their heads to change the political complexion of the legislature.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Osakis Review: International Falls is to have one of the largest paper mills in the world. The machinery for the plant will fill 50 cars and will cost $250,000. The Backus-Brooks company of Minneapolis are behind the project.

Hibbing Tribune: If you never realized what a rich man you are, add yourself up by the Lurment bill now before the legislature. Two hundred and fifty dollars for each big toe, and $100 for the other toes. Two eyes $20,000, hand and foot, $10,000, to say nothing of the appendix, etc., which ought to top you off to a million.

Stillwater Cazette: Some inquisitive fellow in the Duluth Herald asks: "Are you keeping Lent? And what for? For the good of your soul or the applause of the public?" We cannot answer, but we have often wondered if some of those who pretended to be following out instructions were really and actually playing honest. There are a great many people who are truly conscientious in church matters, as they in are everything, but there are people who make a great display that are only fooling the casual observer. Those who make it a point to know who's who, can spot these pretenders with one eye shut and both hands and feet tied.

Warren Register: From disinterested sources we learn that there is unquestionably much opposition to the location of the Armour packing plant in Minneapolis from residents of that city. The business interests that rule Minneapolis are undoubtedly very anxious that Armour & Co. shall establish their plant there, but in those parts of the city where it is feared the ordors from the plant will become disagreeable, if not unhealthy, the people refuse to enthuse over the project. On the other hand, St. Paul's opposition may be due in part to its jealousy of the up-river twin. If the Swift interests are involved in the fight, they have not yet shown their hand.

MARRIED IN HASTE

Former Ada Attorney Rescued Young Lady and Then Married Her.

Alex Mackel, formerly of Ada, where he practiced law and gave the fair sex a wide berth, was the hero in a romantic marriage at Seattle, the account of which has appeared in all the daily papers under big head lines. As is well known Alex is a leading lawyer at Butte, where he does the "Bill Erwin" act quite often in clearing his clients, and he has been very successful. Last Saturday he visited Seattle and while there a pretty young lady was just about to be run down by a street car, when Alex reached out and grabbed her just in time to save her life. It is persumed the young lady was exceedingly grateful and Alex was sharp enough to know that the proper moment had arrived. Anyway it looks like that for Alex invited her to dinner, which she accepted, and while eating he proposed, was accepted and a few minutes later they were married. Alex said "We would have been married half an hour sooner if it had not been for a pinheaded waiter who stuck around our table." However, the record for swift marriages in Seattle was broken and Alex is no doubt satisfied. The young lady proved to be Miss Ellen Shellito, of Crossville, Tenn., and had arrived in Seattle only a few hours before she met Mr. Mackel.—Ada Index.

FIRE AT ST. HILAIRE

American House Burned Last Week—Loss Covered by Insurance.

St. Hilaire Spectator: The fire bell sounded an alarm just before 3 a. m. Tuesday and the American House, owned by Mrs. Annie Abrahamson, was found to be in flames.

The fire was discovered by Carl Steen who lives in the cottage on the adjoining lot, and had gained considerable headway before it awakened him. He turned in an alarm over the telephone and awoke the occupants of the burning building, Mr. A. G. and Miss Annie Abrahamson, who escaped just in time with only such garments as they could gather together in their hasty flight.

The origin of the fire is unknown but it is thought to have caught from a defective chimney. Before the fire department arrived the building and its contents were doomed and by the hardest kind of work the Patterson cottage occupied by Carl Steen, was saved but badly scorched. Considering that this building was only five or six feet away, it was a very creditable performance for the fire department. It was thought for a time that the Holmes building was in danger and with it a large part of the town but falling snow helped wonderfully.

The loss was covered by an insurance of $1,000 on the building and $700 on its contents.

The American House was one of the oldest buildings in St. Hilaire, having been erected in the spring of 1883 by Thomas Libby and was the principal hotel in town until the building of the Markham in 1897.

Mrs. Jos. Brohmann, living in the northern part of Red Lake Falls, Minn., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble and rheumatism for several years. A dull pain in the small of my back was very severe and I often suffered from headaches and felt languid and listless all the time. I was very nervous, my back was weak and I knew by the unnatural appearance of the kidney secretions that my kidneys were disordered. I finally sent to W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store, procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and had had only used them a short time when I felt a great deal better. The secretions from my kidneys have become clear, and I now suffer but little from pains in my back."

S.S.S. HEALS OLD SORES

No old sore exists merely because the flesh is diseased at that particular spot; if this were true simple cleanliness and local applications would heal them. Whenever a sore or ulcer refuses to heal readily, the blood is at fault; this vital fluid is filled with impurities and poisons which are being constantly discharged into the place, feeding it with noxious matter and irritating and inflaming the nerves and tissues so the sore cannot heal. These impurities in the blood may be the remains of some constitutional trouble, the effect of a debilitating spell of sickness, leaving disease germs in the system, or the absorption by the blood of the fermented refuse matter which the bodily channels of waste have failed to remove. Again the cause may be hereditary, the diseased blood of ancestry being handed down to posterity; but whatever the cause, the fact that the sore will not heal shows the necessity for the very best constitutional treatment. There is nothing that causes more worry and anxiety than an old sore which resists treatment. Every symptom suggests pollution and disease—the discharge, the red, angry looking flesh, the pain and inflammation, and the discoloration of surrounding parts, all show that deep down in the blood there are morbid and dangerous forces at work, constantly creating poisons which may in the end lead to Cancer. Local applications are valuable only for their cleansing and antiseptic effects; they do not reach the blood, where the real cause is located, and can therefore have no real curative worth. S. S. S. heals old sores by going down to the fountain-head of the trouble and driving out the poison-producing germs and morbid matters which are keeping the ulcer open. It removes every particle of impurity from the circulation and makes this life-stream pure, fresh and health-sustaining. Then as new, rich blood is carried to the place the healing begins, all discharge ceases, the inflammation leaves, new tissue and healthy flesh are formed, and soon the sore or ulcer is well. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and finest of tonics, just what is needed in the treatment, and in addition to curing the sore will build up and strengthen every part of the system. Special book on Sores and Ulcers and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

I want to recommend S. S. S. to any who are in need of a blood purifier, and especially as a remedy for sores and obstinate ulcers. In 1877 I had my leg badly cut on the sharp edge of a barrel, and having on a blue woolen stocking the place was badly poisoned from the dye. A great sore formed and for years no one knows what I suffered with the place. I tried, it seemed to me, everything I had ever heard of, but I got no relief and I thought I would have to go through life with an angry, discharging sore on my leg. At last I began the use of S. S. S., and it was but a short time until I saw that the place was improving. I continued it until it removed all the poison from my blood and made a complete and permanent cure of the sore. JNO. ELLIS.

CITY ORDINANCE NO. 32

An Ordinance Granting to the Red Lake Falls Electric Light Company, the Right to Maintain, Erect, Construct, and Add to an Electric Light and Power Plant in the City of Red Lake Falls, and Providing for the Lighting of Said City.

The City Council of the City of Red Lake Falls do ordain as follows:

SECTION I—In consideration of the benefits to accrue to the city of Red Lake Falls, and the payments and mutual covenants and agreements hereinafter contained, the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company, a corporation, is hereby granted the right to enter upon the streets, highways, alleys, bridges, and public grounds of said city to construct, erect, and maintain in, along and over the streets, highways, alleys and bridges, and public grounds, posts, poles, wires, and other appliances and fixtures for electric light and power purposes, subject to all the general provisions of the statutes of Minnesota now in force, and applicable thereto, and to such reasonable rules and regulations respecting such streets, highways, alleys, bridges and public grounds, as said city may hereinafter enact, provided, however, that such rules and regulations shall not impair the usefulness or value of the property of said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company, and said company is granted the right to continue to maintain the lines and electric lighting apparatus now in use and owned by said company in said city.

SECTION II—Said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company is hereby granted the right to construct, erect, and maintain an electric light and power plant in said city, and repair, enlarge and extend the same, and to carry on the business of selling and furnishing electric light and power.

SECTION III—The authorities and powers hereby granted are subject to the following terms and restrictions:

a—All poles and posts used in the construction of the pole lines in connection with said plant shall be reasonably straight, placed in or adjacent to the line of the curb of the sidewalk or otherwise in such manner as not to unreasonably impede the public travel.

b—And said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company shall hold said city harmless of and from any and all causes of actions, liabilities, and damages caused and accruing through or by reason of neglect, error or mismanagement, or default in the construction, or operation of said plant, or any part thereof.

c—During the construction of any part of said plant, in, along, upon, or over the streets, highways, alleys, bridges, or public grounds, of said city, the said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company shall not impede public travel thereon, and shall leave all the said streets, highways, alleys, bridges, and public grounds upon which they may enter for the purposes herein described, in as good condition as they were at the time of such entry.

d That in the event that any person or persons shall desire to move any building or structure upon or over any street, highway, alley bridge or public or private grounds in said city, and the wires or appliances of said electric light company, shall be in the way of or interfere with the moving aforesaid, said electric light company shall within twenty-four hours after being notified, remove or cut said wires or appliances, so as to permit such moving of building or structure as aforesaid at the expense of said electric light company, and replace the same also at its own expense. Provided that said wires or appliances need not be cut or remain cut except between the hours of seven o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon of any day, and the person or persons moving said building or structures or having charge thereof, or giving said notice, shall use all possible diligence in moving said building or structure out of the way of said wire or appliances, and shall be required to move the same out of the way of said cut wires within three hours after the same are cut, and before three o'clock in the afternoon.

SECTION IV—In consideration of the maintenance, erection, construction, and operation of said plant of said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company, the city of Red Lake Falls hereby agrees to and with the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company, to take and pay for eight or ten, (as the council may order) arc lights nominally twelve hundred candle power for street lighting of said city at ninety dollars ($90.00) per annum for each light, payable in monthly installments, such lights to remain as now located or at such other places as the city council may direct, and also such other lights as may be ordered by the city council of said city, to be located at such points as such council may direct, but not exceeding two blocks from the main wires of said plant. Lights ordered by the city council at a distance beyond two blocks from the main wires of said plant are to be put in on condition that a light be constructed for every two blocks from said main wires to said furthest lights.

And for any and all incandescent street lights furnished said city, said company shall be paid at the rate of $1.50 per month for each thirty-two candle power light. Section V—Insulated wire only shall be used in conducting electricity, and no poles shall be erected within or upon the business streets of said city less than thirty-five feet in length. Said city clerk shall immediately notify said two arbitrators to meet within ten days thereafter and arbitrate and decide said matters to be so fixed. But if they shall be unable to agree, then said arbitrators shall by their appointment in writing filed with the city clerk, designate some other competent disinterested person to act as a third arbitrator, who shall be notified in the same manner, and said three arbitrators shall meet within five days thereafter and duly arbitrate and decide said matters, and file their written decision with the city clerk, and the rates by them fixed shall be the rates charged by the said Electric Light company for Tungsten lamp lighting during the term of this franchise. The reasonable expense of such arbitration shall be paid one half by the city and one half by said electric light company.

For meter lighting the Tungsten lamps shall be installed on demand, and current rates thereof shall be the same as meter rates of incandescent lighting.

Section VI—Notwithstanding the terms established in this ordinance, the said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company shall during the continuance of this franchise, furnish electric light to any person in said city at the rate heretofore and now charged such person, provided that the lights are used as when the said rate was established, and the user complies with such established and reasonable rules of said company as shall be filed with the city clerk and duly approved by the city council.

Section VII—Said Red Lake Falls Electric Light company shall keep all lights ordered burning until dawn on all dark nights, that is to say, on all nights except bright moonlights, or on what is known as the moonlight schedule for public lights.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour raisings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Hiapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion. 23-26

Nothing in the way of a cough is quite so annoying as a tickling, teasing, wheezing bronchiacough, The quickest relief comes perhaps from a prescription known to Druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. And besides, it is so thoroughly harmless that mothers give it with perfect safety even to the youngest babes. The tender leaves of a simple mountain shrub, give to Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy its remarkable curative effect. A few days' test will tell. Sold by all dealers.

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescripts on forces the clogged-up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home, who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disoders or Rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good Rheumatism prescriptions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it you want it badly. 23-25

A failing tiny nerve—no larger than the finest silken thread—takes from the Heart its impulse, its regularity. The Stomach also has its hidden or inside nerve. It was Dr. Shoop who first told us it was wrong to drug a weak or failing Stomach. Heart or Kidneys. His prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed straight for the cause of these ailments—these weak and faltering inside nerves. This, no doubt clearly explains why the Restorative has of late grown so rapidly in popularity. Druggists say that those who test the Restorative even for a few days soon become fully convinced of its wonderful merit. Anyway, don't drug the organ. Treating the cause of sickness is the only sensable and successful way. Sold by all dealers.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

Indiscretion of Imogene

By

BEATRICE BIDELLE

Imogene turned and twisted in front of the long mirror, and was satisfied with what it showed her.

"Mademoiselle est jolie comme une ange," said the maid.

Imogene ran lightly downstairs.

"Celeste says I'm 'jolie comme une ange,' Wingate," she told her brother, who stood in the hall.

He contemplated her with a meaningless stare.

"I don't understand French," he re[illegible].

[illegible] her arm and pulled as [illegible] as her hand could [illegible] grasp.

"[illegible] this cutting!" she said, [illegible] into the drawing room.

"Celeste says I'm 'jolie comme une ange,'" [illegible] to her pretty, little [illegible] happily under the [illegible] impression that [illegible] in the house sufficed [illegible] for her motherless niece. [illegible] did not raise her eyes from her knitting.

"[illegible] dear," she murmured, "French maids seldom speak the truth. One—two—three—"

Imogene stamped and went into the library. "Celeste says I'm 'jolie comme une ange,' papa," she said.

Her father hardly glanced up from the evening newspaper.

"Beware!" he cautioned. "She must be meditating a particularly daring raid upon your wardrobe." And Imogene [illegible], accidentally on purpose, on [illegible], as she arranged her hair in the glass over the mantel shelf.

"I'm sorry," said her father, without raising his eyes. "What did you want me to say?"

Imogene went to her ball in the company of her father and brother.

"You're a horribly unsatisfactory couple," she told them; "and if any one asks me to elope with him tonight, I'll do it!"

"If any one should be so foolish, tell him to come and make inquiries of me first," said her brother.

"Or, at any rate, see that he has the wedding ring on the end of his finger," added the father.

She sat out five dances with a young, good-looking and impecunious cousin.

At the first:

"Celeste says I'm 'jolie comme une ange,' Teddy," she said.

"You're 'jolie' as dozens and dozens of 'anges,'" remarked Teddy, with conviction.

At the second:

"When I told Wingate about Celeste, he said he didn't understand French," she pouted.

"It's no use expecting anything from brothers," said Teddy.

At the third:

"When I told auntie about Celeste, she said, 'Oh, my dear, French maids seldom speak the truth. One—two—three—'" mimicked Imogene, and held up [illegible] fingers knitting pins.

"She's forgotten her youth," sympathized her cousin.

At the fourth:

"When I told papa about Celeste, he said 'Beware! She must be meditating a particularly daring raid upon your wardrobe,'" said Imogene, her brows raised.

"Having dealt with the stock exchange all his life, he must be forgiven for having grown suspicious," murmured Teddy.

At the fifth:

"I told papa and Wingate that they were a horribly unsatisfactory couple, and that, should any one ask me to elope with him tonight, I'd do it," said Imogene.

"And they said?" interrogated Teddy.

"Wingate said: 'If any one should be so foolish, tell him to come and make inquiries of me first;' and papa said, 'Or, at any rate, see that he has the wedding ring on the end of his finger,'" quoted Imogene.

"And did you mean what you said?" asked the Impecunious One, who was soft of heart.

"Why not?" said Imogene.

The Impecunious One removed his glove.

"Here's the ring," he said, showing a plain gold band upon his little finger. "The question is, where's the elopement?"

Imogene wrinkled her brows.

"It takes two to elope," she remarked, "just as much as to make a quarrel."

"I'll be the one," promised the tempter, "if you'll be the other."

Imogene got up and held out her hand.

"Come on," she dimpled.

"But—er—in that costume?" hesitated Teddy, a little taken back.

"Why not?" said Imogene. "Am I not 'jolie comme une ange' in this costume?"

"You are," he acquiesced.

"Besides," added Imogene, "I happened to have a long, dark cloak with me, which will cover me up entirely, and I can make the flowers in my hair look like a toque—they're not real?"

"Tomorrow—perhaps—" hesitated the cousin.

Imogene sat down.

"Of course," she said, with a fine show of sarcasm, "if you're doing all this for my convenience, we'll give up the idea—"

"How many times have I told you that I couldn't live without you?" demanded the cousin indignantly.

"So many that I'm almost compelled to doubt your veracity when I see you in such invariably excellent health," jeered Imogene.

"It's for your good"—began Teddy.

"That settles it," interrupted Imogene with decision. "I'll go tonight, or not at all!"

"Then come!" said the Impecunious One with the soft heart.

She demurred.

"Let's go to the supper room first," she said, "I want some ices."

"Oh, down-to-date maiden with the out-of-date name, let us act upon your suggestion!" sighed her lover.

When she met him at the park gates no one would have known that she was in evening dress.

The cousin sent his motor spinning down the road.

"Where are we going?" asked Imogene.

"To Scotland, mon ange," cried the cousin, and whistled a triumphant bar or two of "Jock o' Hazledean."

"Whose motor is this?" asked Imogene.

"Why not mine?" inquired Teddy.

"Pouf!" she scoffed, plainly showing her opinion of his pleasantry.

"How rude!" said Teddy. "Having just come through the bankruptcy court, I'm quite rich—for the moment."

"I never heard of it," said Imogene.

"Would you give me up if I had?" asked Teddy.

She thought a moment.

"No," she said. "Somehow, I like you' even though you're a hopeless spendthrift."

He laughed queerly.

"Thanks; but if I'm a hopeless spendthrift, what will we live upon?"

I don't know," returned Imogene carelessly, "If it's so profitable to go through bankruptcy court, you might make a habit of it."

"I don't know that it's as profitable as all that," objected her companion.

"I'll have money of my own when I'm twenty-one," mused Imogene. "We might go to the Jews on the strength of it."

"Little angel," cried the impecunious one, with the sadness born of knowledge, "you don't know what you're talking about. Besides, your money isn't my money."

"No," agreed Imogene, "I'll have that made very clear."

"Oh, down-to-date maiden with the out-of-date name!" sighed Teddy.

"You might take what you liked, explained Imogene. "I only meant that I'd have it clearly understood that it was my own."

When Teddy slowed down the motor—they were in a country lane, and day was only dawning—and kissed her.

Imogene blushed scarlet.

"Don't do it again," she said, "not yet, anyway. I don't know whether I liked it."

"Tell me when you've decided that you did," begged Teddy.

"But perhaps," she objected, "I never shall."

"I think you will," said Teddy.

She hesitated.

"But what if I don't?" she asked.

"I don't know," said Teddy gloomily.

"Would you want me to do it often?" inquired Imogene.

"Yes," said Teddy, growing still more gloomy.

"Would you mind," said Imogene, after a long pause, "turning around and taking me home, please?"

Teddy started.

"I should mind very much," he averred, with decision.

Imogene put her hand on his arm.

"You see," she said earnestly, "it would be so foolish to marry you while I wasn't sure whether I liked you to kiss me or not, wouldn't it?"

"Shall I do it again?" asked Teddy, brightening. "It might convince you."

"Not on any account," said Imogene hastily.

He was incensed.

"You see," she said wildly, "I' mso afraid I might be convinced in the wrong direction." And then, having a sense of humor, Teddy laughed.

This time she was incensed, and he, in his turn, grew wily.

"I laughed because I didn't want to cry," he explained, and partial peace was restored.

She waited a few minutes.

"I really wish to go home," she said.

Teddy grew rigid.

"Of course, I'm not going to marry you against your will," he remarked, and turned the car homeward.

As they neared the house the carriage containing her father and brother drew aside to let them pass.

"I left a message for them to say I'd gone," explained Imogene. "I didn't say 'home,' but I knew they'd infer it; and I thought if they went there first 'twould give us a longer start."

Teddy nodded gloomily.

As they passed the carriage Imogene leant forward and waved her hand in the most engaging manner; her relatios lifted their caps and scowled; Teddy, of the inconveniently soft heart, they ignored.

"How are we going to explain?" asked that young delinquent dubiously. "I'd better have an interview with your father."

"Stupid!" cried Imogene. "Leave it to me."

She hopped out airily at her own door and stood on the step, awaiting the arrival of the more tardy vehicle.

Her father descended heavily and without looking at her.

"Oh, papa!" cried Imogene, "we've been out for such a lovely spin!" It was quite a new experience, and so invigorating!"

"If we were living in the days when it wasn't outlandish to call people by your name, you'd have a brand new experience connected with a horsewhip and a diet of bread and water," said her father, and disappeared into the house.

Imogene turned to her brother with an expression of mild surprise on her face.

"I wonder what on earth's the matter with papa, Wingate?" she remarked.

"I wonder!" said Wingate sententiously, and followed his parent.

Imogene looked at Teddy, smiled wickedly, and danced a silent pas seul on the doorstep.

"What would they say if they knew?" she whispered.

"What indeed!" said Teddy grimly.

"And to think they might have been tearing off now in pursuit of us!" murmured Imogene, a trifle regretfully.

"Just think of it!" said Teddy, more grimly still.

"If you hadn't kissed me they'd have done it," nodded Imogene, a distant note of reproach in her voice.

"I wish to goodness I hadn't been such a fool!" said Teddy, most grimly of all.

"What?" cried Imogene, horror-struck. "First you insult me by kissing me, and then you insult me further by saying you wish you hadn't! Well, I never!" and she made for the door.

Teddy stopped her.

"Imogene," he said, "think it over, will you?"

"What?" asked Imogene.

"Whether you could stand being kissed by me again," said Teddy.

Imogene closed the door, then opened it an inch or so and showed two pursed up lips in the aperture, after which she shut it, hastily and finally, and her cousin stumbled dizzily down the steps.

Next day Imogene told her aunt the "early morning drive" version of her escapade.

"It was an indiscretion," said her aunt placidly, "a distinct indiscretion, my dear."

"If you only knew it," murmured Imogene, "the discretion far outweighed the indiscretion, auntie."

"What did you say?" questioned her aunt. And counted, "One—two—three—"

Every day, for a month after that Imogene received a letter which contained only the words:

"Could your stand it?"

At the end of the month she wrote: "Yes, please," beneath the latest arrival, and took it to the post herself.

When she and he had somewhat setted down, he said:

"I've been neft fifty thousand pounds, so I shan't need to borrow your money."

"I'm sorry to hear it," said Imogene. "I'd like to have lent it to you. The motor is my own," he added. "I had the legacy about a week when I went to that ball, and should have proposed to you if you hadn't proposed to me."

"I didn't," cried Imogene. And the subject is still a matter of dispute between them.

The Months and the Jewels.

Garnets, January's gems, mean "Victory and Power";
February amethysts rule sweet "Affection's" hour;
March with jaspers decorate those who are "Wise and Bold";
April's deep-blue sapphires reign where "Truth" is bravely told;
Chalcedonies belong to May; their message is "Good Cheer";
The emeralds of June declare "Immortal Life" is clear;
July claims diamond's "Purity"—freedom from spot or stain;
August's sky-blue turquoises stand for "Worldly Gain."
September's chrysolites proclaim, "Hope ever for the best";
The beryls of October tell of "Happiness and Rest."
November's glowing topazes are types of "Faithful Friends," December's blood-red rubies sing, "Gold's power never ends."

THE WIDOW'S MESSAGE.

"Yes, ma'am," said the medium to a young widow, "I can prove to you that the man whom you have loved is near to us."

"How am I to know?"

"You have but to say 'Come!' and immediately you will see one of those chairs move that are standing against the wall."

The lady made an effort to control her excitement, and said: "Come!"

Suddenly six chairs began to dance a wild tarantella. The lady blushed, paid and went.

The Safest Place.

"Yes, sir, I'm giving you straight goods," remarked the automobile manufacturer to a man who was looking over his latest models with a view to purchasing. "We are putting on the market the very best motor car that brains and money can produce, and we are not afraid to stand right back of every machine we send out."

"Well," drawled the prospective customer thoughtfully, as he walked slowly around the car, "I shouldn't wonder a mite if that was safer than standing in front of the plaguey things."—Judge.

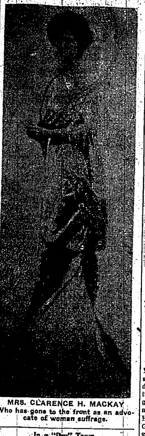
STANDS FOR THE "RIGHTS" OF WOMEN



MRS. CLARENCE H. MACKAY
Who has gone to the front as an advocate of woman suffrage.

In a "Dry" Town.

Two men from New York awoke one morning to find themselves in Savannah. Remembering that they were in a prohibition state, and having a thirst worthy of their surroundings, the pair started out on a still hunt for an eye-opener.

They were not acquainted and were in a quandary as to where to start on their quest, and while they were debating the question mentally between them they were approached by a pleasant looking policeman, who wished them "good morning."

"Say, Jim," said one of the pilgrims to the other, "this is an opening. Here's a good fellow; let's ask him?" It was agreed, and the officer answered their inquiry by saying laconically, "Follow me." He walked them three blocks until they stood in front of the Cathedral. Here he paused.

The travelers looked at each other in astonishment.

"Surely, my good man," said the first, "you do not mean to tell us that a blind tiger is being operated in a church?"

"You see the church, do you?" asked the policeman solemnly.

"Yes," assented the two.

"Well, that is the only place in Savannah that you can't get it," said he.—Bohemian.

Generosity Appreciated.

"Be you Dr. Ponder?" asked a tall, lean man, walking into the consulting room of a fashionable Chicago practitioner.

"I am" replied the doctor.

"Well, looks a-here, old feller," remarked the visitor, "I'm glad to find yer at last. D'ye remember in '98, when you was in London, how yer set a feller's arm and didn't charge him for it?"

"Yes," said the doctor, with the prospect of a big fee rising before him.

"Well, sir," said the visitor, "I'm that feller, an' I've broke the other arm, so I'm come to have it fixed on the same terms."—Tit-Bits.

Diagnosis.

Into a general store of a town in Arkansas there recently came a darky complaining that a ham which he had purchased there was not good.

"The ham is all right, Zeph," insisted the storekeeper.

"No, it ain't, boss," insisted the negro. "Dat ham's shore bad."

"How can that be," continued the storekeeper, "when it was cured only last week?"

The darky scratched his head reflectively, and finally suggested:

"Den mebbe it's had a relapse."—Harper's Weekly.

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of an artist and asked for money to obtain a meal, as he was too weak to work.

The artist gave him a shilling, and then, seeing possibilities for a sketch in the queer old fellow, said:

"I'll give you half a dollar if you'll let me paint you."

"Sure," said the man, "it's an easy way to make money; but—but I'm wonderin' how I'll get it off."—Pick-Me-Up.

Hazel Drew, a Brooklyn heiress, who will receive on her eighteenth birthday, on May 1, $150,000 willed to her by Daniel Drew, her great-uncle, and who eloped on Christmas night with Walter McGreal of No. 756 Union street, Brooklyn, is now in Chicago, living with the young man and apparently very happy.

Mrs. Edith Drew Hall, mother of the girl, of No. 272 Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, who swore out a warrant for the arrest of McGreal on a charge of abduction and who sent detectives in search of the couple, failed to find any trace of them. The discovery of the whereabouts of the eloping couple came through a letter written by the young man to his father, T. J. McGreal, under date of Jan. 10.

ENTERTAINED FOR LADY PAGET

LADY PAGET.

In the ballroom of the Plaza Frederick New York, City Townsend Martin gave a dinner for Lady Paget, who arrived from England last week for a visit in New York of two months. The guests, numbering about sixty, were seated at a circular table, in the center of which was a cherry tree in full blossom. Piled upon the cloth in great profusion were heaps of fruit in season and out, the variegated colors making an effective decoration. The Plaza's chef de cuisine called it a table d'abondance. In the corners of the ballroom were groups of palms, specimen ferns and spring plants arranged by Thorley.

"Harry, is it?" returned President Brown. "And did you know the evil one is often called Old Harry?"

"Why, no, sir," answered the boy. "I thought he was called Old Nick."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Logic of Facts.

R. E. McCulloch tells of a Harper county farmer, who lives near a railroad and close by a whistling station, that one day, wishing to get a letter off somewhere he rushed out on the track, frantically waved his cap and stopped the train. "Look here, don't you know you can't stop this train?"

The farmer replied:

"Well, by gum, I did stop it."—Kansas City Star.

"Eczema began over the top of my ear. It cracked and then began to spread. I had three different doctors and tried several things, but they did me no good. At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. The eczema itched so that it seemed as though I could tear my face all to pieces. Then I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and it was not more than three months before it was all healed up. Miss Ann Pearsons, Northfield, Vt., Dec. 19, 1907."

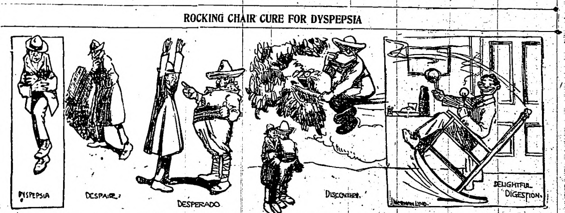
ROCKING CHAIR CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA



Have you heard of the new cure for dyspepsia—the rocking chair cure? No, it isn't a joke. It is every bit as serious as a physician's prescription and according to the testimony of many sufferers it accomplishes what the doctors do not accomplish.

It costs nothing to take this cure, provided you have a rocking chair, and certainly the treatment is very pleasant. No drugs, no violent exercise, no dieting or privations of any has been rediscovered in New York sort. Just sit down while you eat, but keep rocking all the time.

Like many other so-called "new discovery," it may be as old as the Egyptian tombs, but at any rate it and is working wonders.

The cure started out on Long Island about a year ago. It was introduced by a very well known young artist, who says he first heard of it from a venerable recluse in the mountains in Sicily.

WESTERN CANADA'S SPLENDID CROP YIELD FOR 1908.

AMERICANS PROFITED LARGELY AND SEND BACK SATISFACTORY REPORTS.

The census branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Canada, has completed its returns of the showing of Western Canada's grain yield for 1908, and the reports make very interesting reading. In the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, which comprise what may be known as Central Canada, there was a total wheat yield of about 107,000,000 bushels, worth to the farmer about $85,000,000; in addition to this the oat, barley and flax crops were worth another $35,000,000. Letters have been received from many of the settlers from the United States. From these, that of Rev. Oscar L. King has been selected. He lives in the vicinity of Edmonton, Alberta, and what he says will be of interest to those who contemplate moving to Central Canada. Every line of the letter is interesting. Those who wish for the particulars as to how to secure homesteads and preemptions should write any Canadian Government agent. Mr. King says:

"Mr. M. V. McInnes, Detroit, Michigan: I am well satisfied with Alberta. This country offers excellent opportunities for anyone to make a good home for himself and family if he is willing to put up with a few hard knocks for the first two or three years. But it is worth a few hard knocks to get a 160-acre farm of rich, productive land with no mortgage on it. This province is well fitted for grains, stock raising and dairying. We have found the climate generally healthful, more healthful than Michigan, and although the thermometer sometimes drops to 40 degrees below zero in winter, yet we do not seem to feel that temperature any more than we did 5 or 10 degrees below zero in Michigan. We like the winters.

"The Government takes great interest in the education of the people and quickly aids the settlers in establishing schools where they are called for. The schools, though graded differently than those in the States, are efficient and advancing. Our great drawback has been the limited and inadequate railway facilities, but new roads are being rapidly built and many more are projected through various parts of the province. The new policy of the Alberta government to construct a great many branch lines throughout the province will greatly help all parts of the country. If those new settlers who have to go back a considerable distance from existing railroads and towns to find free homesteads will but locate along the line of a projected railroad they will in two or three years be near both town and railroad. When I first came to this country three and a half years ago the homestead I took was 75 miles from a railroad town; now there is a railroad 25 miles north, another 25 miles south, and a third is being built through my neighborhood.

"I think the prairie country or country that is partly prairie offers much better opportunities than the hilly portions."

The next best thing to winning a victory is to know why you got licked.

George E. Law, Justice of the Peace, 13½ Franklin St., Brazil, Ind., is known far and wide as the "Marrying Squire," from the fact that he has married more couples than any other official in Indiana. Judge Law wrote a letter in 1906, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, which he said had made a bad back well, enabled him to sleep better nights and feel more fit for work. The treatment also cleared up the urine. On January 5, 1909, Judge Law confirmed his previous testimony. "I have recommended this remedy to many people since I first used it," said he.

30 MATCHES APIECE DAILY.

Our Average for Every Man, Woman and Child.

The American people use up the enormous total of 700,000,000 matches a year. It is the general belief that matches are the by-product of planing mills and other wood working factories, but as a matter of fact the best grade of two inch lumber is used for matches, while sash, doors and blinds are the by-products of the match timber sawmills.

In a single year the manufacturers cut 225,00,000 feet (board measure) of pine in the Great Lakes region, and one of the 150-odd factories used up 200,000 feet of sugar or yellow pine logs every day. The deduction is that common with other industries of the United States depending upon existing forests the matchmakers are within sight of a shortage in the wood supply.

When the present timber holdings have been depleted says the Technical World, they of course cannot be duplicated in a generation, and the people of this country may have to get along with fewer than twenty-five or thirty matches a day each, as at prsent . In their insistent way they will probably demand that the practice of Germany and France be followed, that foresters plant and grow timber especially for matches.

NEW IDEA

Helped Wis. Couple.

It doesn't pay to stick too closely to old notions of things. New ideas often lead to better health, success and happiness.

A Wis. couple examined an idea new to them and stepped up several rounds on the health ladder. The husband writes:

"Several years ago we suffered from coffee drinking, were sleepless, nervous, sallow, weak and irritable. My wife and I both loved coffee and thought it was a bracer." (delusion.)

"Finally, after years of suffering, we read of Postum and the harmfulness of coffee, and believing that to grow we should give some attention to new ideas, we decided to test Postum.

"When we made it right we liked it and were relieved of ills caused by coffee. Our friends noticed the change—fresher skin, steadier nerves, better temper, etc.

"These changes were not sudden, but relief increased as we continued to drink and enjoy Postum, and we lost the desire for coffee.

"Many of our friends did not like Postum at first, because they did not make it right. But when they boiled Postum according to directions on pkg., until it was dark and rich, they liked it better than coffee and were benefited by the change." "There's a Reason."

Almar Coply's Clock

By ALVAH MILTON KERR

(Original.)

In the evening of Almar Coply's twenty-first birthday his father called him into his sleeping room, and, opening a safe which stood in an alcove with an iron gate and railing before it, revealed to the youth that which made him gasp with amazement.

Seven bags of gold, each marked $10,000, lay in the vault, daggers were there with gem incrusted handles, bracelets and rings that blazed with precious stones, and in one corner a curious jewel box bound in silver-threaded cloth.

This box Capt. Coply drew forth and opened warily in the flare of the gaslight.

All the bottom of the box shimmered and flamed with loose diamonds, and upon these lay a miniature picture of a woman, dark-eyed, beautiful, and set round with a scroll of gems. The face was strange to Almar, and he stared at it and the gleaming hoard in speechless wonder.

"To think," said the man, hoarsely, "I gathered all this wealth for your mother. I brought it home that we might live in ease the balance of our lives. But I had scarcely set foot on shore when they told me she was dead! God, what a blow that was! I could follow the sea no more." Sudden tears ran down his cheeks and glanced among the quivering gems.

"Where and how did you get all this?" stammered Almar.

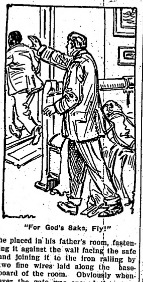
"In India, most of it; not all by fair means, yet none at the cost of blood."

He thrust the box into the safe and shut and locked the iron door.

"When I am gone all will be yours, my son; it will not be long."

From that night, Almar changed; upon his young shoulders descended a burden of mystery, trouble and care. Since his mother's death his father had grown broken and aged; the man seemed haunted with fear.

One day Almar brought home from the polytechnic school a curious clock, a mechanism of his own devising. This he placed in his father's room, fastening it against the wall facing the safe and joining it to the iron railing by two fine wires laid along the baseboard of the room. Obviously whenever the gate was opened the queer timepiece was to perform some sort of inexplicable service. After that Capt. Coply never opened the iron gate without first stopping the clock.



"For God's Sake, Fly!"

Time ran on, and in the latter part of a certain June, a woman, dressed in foreign fashion, came to land from a steamer in the harbor. By chance Almar saw her as she descended the gang-plank with other debouching passengers.

This strange fact Almar finally whispered to his father. He received no explanation, but from that hour Capt. Coply grew gravely ill and restless. Drugs did him no good, and presently a man who, report said, wrought wonders by physical magnetism, came daily to the Coply dwelling to soothe and strengthen the invalid. Dr. Zario was the name he bore, a dark-haired man of powerful mold, and with eyes that seemed to pass their gleam into the very souls of others. His influence over Capt. Coply seemed helpful, but Almar felt a faint distrust and fear of him. Once he met the doctor with the strange lady walking in a by-street.

At last a hot night in August was made memorable with tragedy. Dawn looked in at Capt. Coply's window and saw him lying on his bed, murdered. All that had passed in the apartment can never be known, but this much seems reasonably clear:

Near the hour of midnight a human figure glided into the room and crept to the sleeper's side; a blow was struck, there was a long clutch of fingers on a bursting throat, then silence. Presently a window shutter was softly opened, hands reached out and drew into the room two insulated wires, then the lattice was closed and curtained; hands grasped the wires in rubber-faced gloves and drew them across the floor to the gate before the safe. Upon opening the gate the figure started and turned a white face toward the clock. A faint whirring and clicking could be heard in the timepiece, but the gloved hands fell briskly to work.

One of the wires was made fast to the side of the safe, the other clamped an odd instrument which was lifted from the floor. From this strange tool a heavy stick of carbon protruded. The two wires stretched away to the street and were soldered to an electric power wire of high voltage. All preparations being complete, the figure pressed the carbon point against the safe door. Instantly there was a blinding blaze of light.

At this moment a second figure, cloaked from crown to toe, flitted across the room and back again. The fierce light continued, the gleaming carbon melting its way into the iron door much as if the barrier were made of cheese. In a brief space the gloved hands thrust in a small bar through the opening, pried back the bolts, opened the door, and drew forth the dazzling hoard of gems and gold.

When the day broke again the wires, the strange tool, the gliding figures and the treasure were gone like things dissolved in darkness.

At eight o'clock that morning, Joe, the mulatto serving man, entered Capt. Coply's room with a tray of food. He looked and fled, calling for help. A moment later Almar entered the apartment. His face flashed white with horror and he fell upon his knees by the bed and cried aloud. Suddenly he rose and ran to the clock. Opening a panel at the side, he drew out a belt of little plates, and, fitting these into a small case, which he took from a drawer, called Joe to his side.

"Run with these to Wardon, the photographer, just 'round the corner. Tell him what has happened. Ask him to instantly develop these and bring them here. For God's sake, fly!"

The mulatto rushed out. Almar looked at the rifled safe and again at his father, then he turned and stumbled down the stair into the sitting-room. Weak and sick, he paced back and forth. Twenty minutes later Dr. Zario came leisurely in to give Capt. Coply his morning treatment. He expressed unstinted amazement and horror at what he found. As he and Almar talked, Joe returned, breathless and bearing the empty jewel box. He had found it in the shrubbery. Placing it on the table, he turned to go, when Zario sternly commanded him to remain.

"Why did you kill Capt. Coply?" he demanded.

The mulatto started back in astonishment. Zario leaned forward and bent an indescribable look upon the trembling man. His eyes had the round, hard, fierce intenseness of the eagle's. The serving man shrank and quivered, but gazed into Zario's eyes as if fascinated. He drew slightly nearer, yet with the look of one struggling to escape the clutch of an invisible power.

"Why did you kill Capt. Coply?" again demanded the doctor, in grating, measured tones.

A strange, half-demented expression crept into the mulatto's face and eyes. He stood panting; his dry lips moved. "I—I killed him for his money, sah!" he gasped in a dry, metallic voice.

Almar stared in utter bewilderment.

"Now, make full confession," said Zario, fixing the poor fellow more surely with his satanic gaze.

The serving man's ashen lips began to move with words that would surely cost him his life, when suddenly Wardon, the photographer, with two officers, burst into the room. "Arrest this man!" cried Wardon, and the officers laid hold on Zario.

With a fine composure and scorn the doctor demanded the reason for his arrest. Wardon stepped to the window and held the little belt of negatives against the light. Almar involuntarily cried out and Zario staggered back, clutching at the air. There he saw himself, dimly in some, but plainly in others, photographed in numerous attitudes, as he looted Capt. Coply's safe! Across two of the pictures a figure flitted cloaked from crown to toe.

After days of weakness and curious stupor Joe returned to his innocent normal self.

Two months later, and just before he was executed, Zario told them where the bags of gold were secreted, but of the gems and the strange woman he would tell nothing. These went, as they came, shrouded in mystery.

SAD TALE OF MANY COLORS.

Incident Reminds One of the Inside of a Rainbow.

Benjamin Black, white, aged 32, a pugilist, and Joseph White, black, aged 28, a sailor, each loved and claimed a clay-bank maiden who lived in Purple alley. Black, white, and White, black, met in the gray glimmer of a summer morn.

At sight of Black, who was white White, who was black, turned white with anger, while Black, who was white, turned black. They passed uncomplimentary remarks. White said Black's liver was white, while Black asseverated that White's heart was black.

Then White, black, mixed with Black, white, and the circumambient air became blue. Black, white, rammed White, black, amidships, while White, black, feinted with his left and landed with his right on the Black, white, nose.

White, who wished his color would fade, and Black, who was superficially white, now clinched, and they both fell into the gutter, where the air before the light one grew dark and the dark one saw radiating streaks of light. At this crisis Policeman Brown hove in sight and dragged the inharmonious combination of colors off to be tried before Judge Red, and the whole variegated affair was written up in lurid style by a green reporter on a yellow newspaper.—N. Y. Herald.

Hole in New French Coins.

The French chamber is to be asked shortly to sanction the minting of some new nickel coins to the value of £3,000,000. There will be two new pieces of 5 and 10 centimes, and these will have a hole in the center, after the manner of the Belgian nickel coins. The names of the new coins and their weights are still under consideration. The hole in the center will effectually prevent any confusion with existing silver coins.

Willing to Take a Chance.

"Gimme a dime for a bed, won't you, mister?" asked the stranger in that half whisper they always use.

Buckley looked at him for a minute thoughtfully. "Well," said he seriously, "bring the bed around and let me see it. If I think it's worth the price I'll give you a dime for it, of course."

The Nolan-Hawkins Mystery

Was It a Case of Resuscitation?

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"If I swing for this in your place, I will come back on earth to see that you get your own proper punishment."

The words were spoken by David Nolan, a farmer boy, to one who had pointed him out as a murderer. David, while crossing a field, saw a man hurrying toward him. When he came up David noticed that he was very much excited. He asked David how he could reach the nearest railroad station and while the boy was telling him put his hand on his arm. Then, drawing a sheath knife, he told David that he would give it to him for his information. After that he darted away in the direction the boy had pointed.

Half an hour afterward, while David was cutting wheat, some half dozen men and boys, among them the man who had given him the knife, came hurrying across the fields. They advanced straight toward David, and when they reached him their leader asked the one who had given the knife:

"Is he the one?"

"Yes. I saw him draw a knife from the body and come in this direction."

"Blood on his shirt sleeve!" exclaimed one.

"And here's the knife!" cried another, drawing the knife from David's pocket.

"All right. Come along."

David was charged with having killed a man whose body had been found beside a road half a mile away. He saw the trick the murderer had played upon him. The man had meanwhile washed his hands in a pond and while trying to reach the railroad had been accosted by a party who had discovered the body. He told them that he had seen the murderer leave it and guided them to David. It was then that David said:

"If I swing for this in your place, I will come back to earth to see that you get your proper punishment."

David did not swing for the crime. He was electrocuted and mainly on the testimony of Newton Hawkins, the man who had left blood on his arm and given him the knife.

Some time after Nolan's execution Hawkins was approached by a negro who entered into a brief conversation with him. An hour later, when Hawkins was entering the house in which he lived, he saw the negro looking at him. He made a dash for his shadower, but the boy slipped into an alley, and Hawkins lost him.

Hawkins saw no more of the negro, but heard of him. The negro was evidently making inquiries concerning him. Hawkins, who had guilt on his conscience, was intending to slip away when he was arrested on a charge made by the police of having committed the murder for which David Nolan had been executed. When his case came up he found the police in possession of a chain of evidence which had been sent to them anonymously. It was originally a clew, but they made it evidence.

During the trial the prisoner while casting his eye over those sitting as spectators in the courtroom saw the negro who had shadowed him. The negro was looking straight at him and continued his gaze. Then for the first time the threat of David Nolan occurred to him. He shuddered.

Hawkins was convicted of the murder and sentenced to death. When seated in the electric chair he cast his eyes over those standing about to witness his execution. There is a limited number of officials at such ceremonies, but in this case the doomed man saw some one else.

"The nigger!" he gasped. "Take him away!"

At the moment the current was turned on, and the ceremony was ended.

There has always been a double mystery in the matter of the Hawkins case. In the first place, the police never learned who had put them on the clew that resulted in obtaining the evidence on which Hawkins was convicted. In the second place, it has never been established whether Hawkins really saw a negro present the moment before he died or was so wrought upon by his approaching end as to see him in imagination. The officials declared that no permission to be present was given to any negro. All those who were there declared that there was no negro among them.

There is a possible explanation. About the time that Nolan was electrocuted it was asserted by physicians that such subjects do not die of electricity, but under the knife at the subsequent autopsy. This opinion was in a measure supported by the discovery that life is usually present in the body a long while after all appearance of it has vanished. These doctors made application to be permitted to experiment on an electrocuted body and were flatly refused by the sheriff. It is well known that Nolan's counsel was convinced of his innocence. It is also a fact that the lawyer was on intimate terms with the sheriff. It has been whispered that with the sheriff's connivance the doctors were permitted to steal Nolan's body and that they resuscitated it. This is the only theory that fits into all the conditions. If Nolan lived again he could not declare himself without bringing a swarm of hornets about the sheriff, who had saved him from a felon's death. Disguised as a negro he might have worked up a case against his enemy. But did he witness the execution, and, if so, how did he get in?

COMMISSIONERS IN SPECIAL SESSION

Order County Ditch No. 34 Constructed—Will Drain Four Townships.

Benefits Assessed Against Land in North, Rocksbury, Smiley and Silverton.

The county commissioners met in a special session Tuesday to take final action on the petition for the construction of proposed county ditch No. 34. After all of the evidence had been heard, it was decided to order the ditch constructed. A large number of farmers interested in the constructoin of the proposed ditch were present, but it was a very harmonious meeting; the only objections raised were as to certain assessments. Some inequalities in assessments were corrected and it was decided to make the ditch four feet instead of seven feet wide at the bottom. Owing to some big drainage work going on in Marshall county it will not be necessary to build so large a ditch as was originally planned.

The ditch will be constructed in the towns of Smiley and Silverton, but will benefit lands in the towns of North and Rocksbury and farmers in the four towns will be assessed according as their land is benefited by the drainage.

Letter From President Taft.

Acting upon the suggestion of some old soldiers and other admirers of President Taft, Mayor Duffy sent a congratulatory message to the president on March 4. A letter from the president, as follows, has been received by Mr. Duffy:

The White House, Washington,
March 6, 1909.

My dear Mr. Mayor:

I was pleased to receive your telegram of March 4. May I convey through you to the citizens of Red Lake Falls my hearty thanks for their congratulations and good wishes.

Twine Takes Another Tumble.

An announcement was made at the February meeting of the board of control of a cut in the price of binder twine from the reduced rates named a few months ago. The former rates for this year were lower than last year, and now an additional cut is to be made to Minnesota farmres. The reduction of pure Manila brand of 650 feet to the pound and of Manila, 600 feet to the pound, is half a cent per pound; for standard Manilla, 550 feet to the pound, the reduction is one fourth of a cent. The price of the various grades are now as follows: Standard, 500 feet to the pound, 6¾ cents; Sisal, 500 feet to the pound, 6¾ cents; Standard Manila, 550 feet to the pound, 7½ cents; Manila, 600 feet to the pound, 8¼ cents; Pure Manila, 650 feet to the pound, 9½.

TO DRAIN MANY ACRES.

Eastern Marshall County to be Benefited by Big Ditch.

State Enigneer George E. Ralph was a Great Northern passenger to Middle River last Saturday. Mr. Ralph stated that the state is to immediately put through a big drainage system for eastern Marshall county. Thief river is to be dredged and straightened its whole length, and a complete system of laterals put in on all the section lines on both sides of the river. The survey, Mr. Ralph stated, will be completed in two weeks, and the contract for the work let at once, so that the entire system will be constructed the coming summer.

When this work is completed thousands of acres of land in eastern Marshall county will be drained.

Read the Label.

Under the pure food laws baking powder labels now show the ingredients of which the powder is made.

Those who appreciate the importance to health and good baking of using a prue cream of tarter powder will read the back of the label carefully and make sure that the ingredients mentioned include cream of tartear.

The food law does not force consumers; it merely helps them to protect themselves. All good housekeepers want cream of tarter baking powders, and will not use alum sustitutes in food, if they know it. As the ingredients are all printed on the back of the label, all may know the facts.

Good baking powder is one of the most useful things in the kitchen; it is easily obtained at any store; the better it is, the more economical it is in cooking materials, and the more it conserves the health of the family.

ORGANIZATION OF THE RIVERSIDE CLUB

Social Organization of Men of Red Lake Falls Has Been Completed.

Club Rooms in Kaus Block Will be Ready for Occupancy Soon.

At the meeting held last Thursday evening the organization of the new social club was practically completed. Nearly sixty men have become members of the organization. The meeting authorized those serving on the committee on organization to adopt the bylaws submitted to the meeting and to proceed with the formalities of incorporating. After considerable debate it was decided that the organization shall be known as the "Riverside Club."

The following officers and directors were elected:

President—S. M. Sivertson.
Vice President—Theo. LaBissoniere.
Treasurer—Jos. Sally.
Secretary—Sam E. Hunt.
Board of Directors—E. G. Buse, Dr. J. C. Wilkinson, V. M. Higinbotham, Dr. N. M. Watson and Jos. Perrault.

The work of remodeling the rooms in the Kaus block, the club's home, is practically completed and some of the furnishings are in and the rooms will be ready for occupancy in a few days.

CAN DRINK BUTTERMILK.

Many Villages Voted No License in the Recent Elections.

Every village in Norman county is dry as the result of the recent elections.

Roseau went dry by the decisive vote of 74 to 52, and the new mayor, R. J. Bell, at once informed the saloon keepers that any future sale of liquors would be illegal and prosecution would follow any violations of the law.

At Middle River the vote on license resulted in a tie. This means that the saloons will have to quit business, for the law requires that when the question is voted upon, the license proposition must receive a majority or the sale of liquor cannot be legalized. And it is said that the Middle River water works system is not in running order.

Fertile continues to be dry. No license carried by a vote of 75 to 50.

STATE TO HOLD SALES

Land Will be Put up at Auction Sale Here June 11.

State Auditor S. G. Iverson will hold sales of state land this year in thirty-five counties beginning May 28 at Elk River and ending July 28 at Wabasha. Many thousand acres will be offered in the northern counties, while small parcels will be put up in some of the older counties of the state, on the usual terms of 15 per cent down on a five-year contract, at four per cent interest.

The sale for Red Lake county will be held at Red Lake Falls June 11.

WILL BUILD THE ROAD

Drainage Company Makes Liberal Concession in Ditching Contract.

Mr. Baird, representing the Standard Drainage company of Windom was here Tuesday in conference with the county commissioners. Mr. Baird's company has the contract for the construction of judicial ditch No. 4. This dtich is to be sixteen miles long. A part of it will be constructed in Equality township and the remainder in Polk county. The Standard Drainage company's bid for the work being the lowest, was accepted and the contract entered into. However, the call for bids specified that bids submitted provide for the construction of a road parallel with the ditch. This stipulation was not contained in the company's bid and did not enter into the contract. Under those conditions it is probable that the company could not be compelled to build the road. Mr. Baird said that his company desired to do the right thing and that they would build the road, though under the contract they could not be compelled to do so. It will cost nearly forty dollars per mile to construct the road, from which statement it is apparent that the company's concession is not a small one.

The Drop of Ink.

First, people think there's a man who keeps up with the procession.

Second, they think he must keep good goods on hand.

Again, if the home paper has enough drops of advertising ink on its surface to make a proper showing the outsider thinks this must be a pretty lively town. Thus a drop of NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING INK is a good thing for the town.

George Porter, superintendent of the Scott and McComb kennels at Elmsford, N. Y., was killed when his automobile plunged over an embankment.

Fire completely destroyed the oatmeal mills at Coralvile, Iowa. Loss was $8,000, of which $5,000 was on buildings and $3,000 on machinery. There was no insurance.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

REVIEW OF THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE STATE LEGISLATORS FOR THE WEEK.

St. Paul, March 5.—James J. Hill addressed the members of the legislature in joint session yesterday. For over two hours Mr. Hill paid homage to his chief household gods—agriculture, conservation and railroad transportation. He sounded a note of warning of the danger that threatens the country through the exhaustion of its natural resources. He omitted none of his famous examples of wasted agricultural resources and ill usage of the fruitful heritage. He asked the legislature to appropriate $50,000 to send 100 graduates of the state agricultural colleges to the farming districts of the state and have them give the farmer practical illustrations and lessons in the most modern methods of cultivating their land and conserving its strength and vitality.

A joint resolution was passed yesterday instructing the speaker and president of the senate to send a telegram to Col. Roosevelt expressing their approval of his work, and to President Taft congratulating him and the people on his induction into office.

In the house Representative Mork introduced a bill proposing a 9 o'clock lid for villages and cities of less than 2,000. The same rule is applied to saloons icensed by county boards.

The senate bill which limits saloons to one for each 500 inhabitants, passed by the senate, was substituted for a similar bill in the house and placed on general orders.

A bill requiring county commissioners' proceedings to be published in all the newspapers in the state was introduced by Representative Bendixen.

A bill requiring non-residents to pay the game and fish commission $10 for a license before they can catch muskrat, mink, beaver and otter in the estate was introduced under suspension of the rules and passed.

A number of bills of minor importance were parsed.

In the Senate.

A bill authorizing the public examiner to prescribe a uniform system of accounting for companies which pay gross earnings taxes, relating to the items constituting a part of the gross earnings, was introduced by Senator Thorpe.

Senator Moonan's state-wide direct primary bill has been reported by the committee on elections and put on the senate general orders along with the Canfield convention measure.

St. Paul, March 6.—Only twenty-six of the sixty-three state senators want to permit the people to nominate United States senators. This was determined on a full vote of the senate yesterday on a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senator McColl's bill was killed by the elections committee the day previous. The twenty-six included all the Democrats, the lone Populist and seven Republicans. The debate preceding the roll call was marked by the most fervid oratory of the session. The following bills were passed:

Regulating the setting of pound nets in the Mississippi between the two states; proposing an amendment to the constitution relating to exemption from taxation of lands used for forestry purposes; permitting cities of 10,000 or less to issued sewer bonds; preventing deception in sale of paris green; permitting veterinarians to administer whisky; authorizing transfer of inmates between Anoka and Hastings insane asylums; relating to the employment of clerks where voting machines are used; creating a board of accountancy; permitting compromise of claims of the state, especially timber trespassers; increasing state aid to public schools.

In the House.

Representative White's bill providing that the lieutenant governor shall be the chief executive of the state when the governor is out of the state was passed by the house yesterday, only six members voting against it.

Thirty-three bills were passed by the house yesterday. Among the more important of them were the following:

Relating to the distribution of liquor license money; to reinstate and validate conditional sales of swamp lands patented to the State of Minnesota under the swamp lands act of March 18, 1860; providing for reservation of water powers upon state lands; relating to the minimum price for which state lands shall be sold; permitting cities and counties to register real estate under the Torrens title; prescribing terms, limitations and conditions on which lands granted to the state by the congress of the United States shall be sold; making it a misdemeanor to publish derogatory statements affecting banks; to provide for the inspection, in cities of 10,000 inhabitants or less, of dairies and dairy herds, the products of which are sold in such cities; to provide for the registration of names of farms; to provide for the examination of the books of accounts and all records of cities of less than 10,000 inhabitants; making the abandonment and neglect of wife or child by persons charged by law with maintenance thereof a felony; making it a gross misdemeanor to take and remove automobiles and motor vehicles from any building without the knowledge and consent of the owner; to provide for leasing state swamp and school lands; to amend laws relating to the prevention and suppression of forest and prairie fires and for appropriating money for the prevention and suppression of such fires; making it a felony to publish exaggerated statements regarding investment stocks; to further conform the organization of the national guard to that prescribed for the regular army; to permit the use of seines in the taking of certain fish; relating to deposits of money not claimed by distributees.

St. Paul, March 8.—There was a wordy fight in the house Saturday over the proposition to accept from the federal government the Indian school at Morris and to convert it into an agricultural school. Several speakers insisted that inasmuch as Stevens county will have direct benefit from the school it should provide means for its maintenance. This view was attacked by other speakers, who argued that the school would be open to boys and girls from any part of the state and would enable the state to increase its opportunities for agricultural education. By an overwhelming vote the bill was recommended to pass.

A bill was introduced making it unlawful for any female persons to wear red white and blue tights or any other emblem displaying the national colors in such disguise at any public performance in the state.

Bills introduced: Amending law authorizing formation of co-operative associations to sell dairy products; relating to public road. legalizing certain floating indebtedness of villages; appropriating $35,000 additional for expenses of session; to detach Morrison county from the Seventh judicial district and attach to the Fifteenth; validating certain payments of money to aid in observance of Memorial day and Independence day; aid for a bridge between Benton and Stearns county; legalizing certain town orders issued in excess of amount voted at annual meeting; providing an additional county attorney in St. Louis county; providing for recording of chattel mortgages with register of deeds; relating to membership of live stock and sanitary board; creating a state land department; appropriating $5,000 additional for buildings completed at Anoka state asylum; granting additional powers to cities to levy assessments; amending law providing examination of books of township, village and school officers.

Bills passed: Authorizing railroad and warehouse commission to keep up physical valuation of railroads; requiring corporations which pay gross earnings to preserve records.

St. Paul, March 9.—A workingman's compensation act which will give something to injured employes who get nothing under the present statutes, and also, to some extent, decrease the expensive litigation connected with personal injury suits, was introduced in the house yesterday by the special committee appointed for that purpose. The present laws are left in existence so that anyone who can recover a large sum can do so in the future, but those who cannot recover at present because of the operation of the fellow servant rule, the law of assumed risk and the law of contributory negligence can recover certain sums stated in the schedule of compensation in the bill. The only exception is that where the employe disobeyed a reasonable rule when he knew that such disobedience would probably result in an accident he cannot recover.

The house spent the forenoon in committee of the whole. The bills that received favorable action included Nolan's bill requiring city councils to look into the character of saloon license applicants, Mattson's bill providing for a census of school children to see that they attend school and Wohlhuter's township drainage bill.

A bill requiring the state board of control to establish a rock-crushing plant at the state reformatory at St. Cloud, to employ at least twenty inmates at the plant and to furnish the crushed rock free on board cars at St. Cloud for the use of the state highway commission, was introduced by Representatives Sawyer and Spooner.

Other bills introduced were: Amending laws relating to surveying of land; requiring school districts to subdivide funds into separate funds for specific purposes; prohibiting sale of certain fish; to establish a uniform law relating to negotiable instruments; providing that members of grain inspection board shall be appointed one each year; providing that only one of married couple need sign petiton for adoption of child when spouse is insane.

The senate was not in session.

St. Paul, March 10.—Capital punishment will stand in the Minnesota statutes for at least two years to come, as the house yesterday refused to recommend the passage of the Bendixen bill abolishing the death penalty for murder in the first degree. The bill was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 35 to 31. Favorable action was taken by the house on the bill requiring licensed draymen and transfer companies to report to license inspectors of the cities in which they do business all changes of residence or location of goods in storage.

The house also indorsed the bill increasing the exemption on personal property to $200. The exemption shall apply, however, only to the head of a family.

Two bills relating to woman suffrage were reported to the house yesterday by the committee on elections without recommendation.

The house committee on express, telegraph and electric lines recommended for passage the bill which will apportion the gross earnings tax received from suburban electric lines among the towns through which the lines pass. In its present form the proportions each town, village or city gets will be based on the value of the company's property in that town.

Bills were introduced as follows: Providing for the dissolution of school districts unable to raise $300 annually; relating to registration of titles; increasing amount which certain districts may raise by taxation; amendments relating to savings corporations.

In the Senate.

Senator Gunderson was recommended yesterday by the state senate by a rising vote for Judge Purdy's place on the United States district bench. The resolution was introduced by Senators Seward and Colb, Republican and Democrat, and was unanimously adopted. The resolution was ordered forwarded to Senators Clapp and Nelson.

Senator Swanson's anti-tuberculin bill was killed in committee of the whole by the deciding vote of the chairman, but later exception was taken to the report of the committee of the whole and the bill is on the table for another fight on the floor.

By a vote of 24 to 23 the senate committee of the whole adopted an amendment to the Cass Lake normal school bill, giving the state normal school board authority to locate the new normal school in the northwestern part of the state. This has the effect of leaving the Cass Lake bill on the desk.

The growing list of employers' liability bills had another addition yesterday when Senator Durment offered one providing for adequate compensation for those injured while employed in hazardous occupations.

Candidates for election to all state offices will be obliged under a bill by Senator Nelson to make affidavits showing not only their expenditures during the campaign, but also what funds each received and from what source.

Other bills introduced were: Authorizing towns to establish libraries; increasing state tax for university purposes; only regular marriages to be legal; permitting state aid to high schools with business course; declaring absence from office or illness cause for appointment of successor.

BIG WATER CLUBS MERGE.

Duluth Yacht and Boat Organizations Now Has 1,200 Members.

Duluth, March 11.—By consoldation of the Duluth Yacht and Boat clubs, effected last night, Duluth now has one of the largest aquatic organizations in the Northwest, having about $100,000 worth of property, including two large boat and club houses on the bay, well equipped with boats of all kinds, and an extensive branch club up St. Louis river, on Spirit lake, near the site of the new steel plant. The membership is nearly 1,200.

KILLED BY COAL GAS.

Woman Is Suffocated and Two Others Have Narrow Escape.

Calumet, Mich., March 11.—Mrs. Watson, aged thirty-five, was suffocated and two other occupants of the House Allouez narrowly escaped death from coal gas last night. The gas escaped from a stove in the candy shop. The proprietor and daughter of Mrs. Watson will recover.

Sleet Storm in Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Wis., March 11.—The sleet storm in Wisconsin is raising havoc with the train service to and from Milwaukee. Dispatches from the state indicate that there was almost a total cessation of traffic on electric railroads.

REDEEMING SWAMP LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Capt. James A. Beard of Windom, Minn., who was in St. Paul last week, has dug one million cubic feet of dirt for the State of Minnesota during the past two seasons, and during the coming two years expects to dig one million more.

The campaign on the Roseau river—a campaign in which the mere mechanism of dredging engineering plays a minor part—has just begun. The first shovelful of earth in the project was pulled out by the drege engines early in the fall of 1906. Ever since that time, excepting three months of winter a year, a steam dredge has pried its way for some twenty miles down this lonely stream of the north which drains millions of acres of the richest land in the world.

At the time of entrance on the Roseau campaign the Great Northern railway at Greenbush, forty miles away, was the only means of fixed transportation into this territory. This made early economic problems of machinery, supplies and fuel. A floating steam dredge with three hundred horse-power in its hull is much more than an elephant on your hands, and if you dare to put it into an isolated swamp, at the invitation of the state, all depends on foresight and calculation whether or not it eats you out of house and home and rusts for want of use.

The state has made a new river channel for the waters that heretofore have run down the Roseau river into lower Manitoba. Work will be continued for several years to come by the state and county and private individuals, the efficiency of which will depend on the work in the river bed.

Penetrate Impassable Swamps.

State engineers have been at work for a month on a thirty-mile branch of the new Roseau channel, which will reach out into the very heart of once impassable swamps and eventually open hundreds of thousands of unincumbered acres to farms. The new branch begins far down the river, in the very center of the main swamp of the Roseau and runs five miles south and thirteen miles east to Whitney lake, an ephemeral body of water. From here the ditch runs noth about five miles to the Roseau river again. One gigantic branch or arm divides from this ditch in the lower part of Roseau county and strikes southwest into what is known as the Two Rivers country in Kittson and Marshall counties. The total mileage is over thirty miles.

The channel of this new branch will be about six feet deep from normal water level and about sixty feet wide. The exact details have not yet been determined by the state engineer. The new river, which will be constructed its entire length through solid earth or swamp muck, will in its turn create a trunk for still smaller waterways which settlers of this district will in the future desire to build.

It will be necessary for the dredges that enter this still more isolated project of the Roseau to build dams behind them every two miles as they work up the channel. Past experience with the grades of this country has shown that the water runs rapidly away and floating dredges which depend on water for carriage would find themselves stranded and useless in the middle of the wastes, were not measures unedertaken for saving thhe measures undertaken for saving the water.

At some points "corncribs" or piles of logs will have to be placed beneath the vertical anchors of the dredging machine in order that it ma yhave a foundation on which to work. The shifting weight of the moving dredg, with its mighty loads of earth from the bed of the channel to the bank dump requires a strong fulcrum on which to act.

The main Roseau river project is not complete, although another dredge was placed on the work last year. Notwithstanding this incompletion the swamps that line the Roseau from its sourve above the Red lakes have lost all their surface water and last summer roads for the first time were laid across the broad unused country and hundreds of tons of hay were harvested by neighboring settlers of the valley.

Ready for Market.

With the progress that is being made on the work of drainage it will not be long before the state will place the land on the market. Just now no one lives on this enormous area of wasted land except at high points for a few miles above Roseau city, where the state has been able to sell it. The state will not put the land on the market until the assessments for drainage have been determined. This cost will only be a few cents per acre, is promised to improve the land many dollars worth and will be the first thorough experiment in state drainage in this country.

The settlers in the Roseau valley, which runs right along the southern border of Manitoba, have increased twofold in the last two years. This is due partly to the employment given them by the dredging companies as well as to the pasturage offered in the reclaimed swamp hay for their cattle.

The Windom steam dredge requires large quantities of wood and places its contract every winter among the settlers for 1,000 or more cords. This must be hauled to the river and in some cases down the river to a point available to the woodboat which runs up from the dredge after fuel. The dredge engines consume about five cords of wood a day.

The Great Northern railroad has recently extended its branch from Crookston to Greenbush, to Roseau City and Warroad. While this railroad crosses the Roseau valley at its most disagreeable point, it runs along a high ridge to Roseau City, which definitely marks the real southern boundary of the lower Roseau valley proper. At times from the train to the left (going) one catches glimpses through the forests that cover this ridge of the illimitable expanse of open prairie and swamp that reaches miles away into a Canadian horizon.

From inquiries at present received by different authorities and business men of the Roseau district there will be a rush to get the state lands when they are finally thrown open to sale. The sale, however, from present indications, will not be held for several years yet, unless, as is possible, small tracts along the bank of the drain constructions are opened to the market immediately.

Since so great a project cannot be restricted to defined territories, many government homesteaders many miles up in the headwaters of the Roseau river are reaping the benefit of the drainage. South of Warroad and Beaudette are the most complex swamps in the world, and the Roseau headwaters in its several branches winds about through them.

Additional contracts for state ditches in the Roseau country will be let next June and probably others will follow them. The state drainage commission does not handle much drainage money for this large state, and is compelled to exercise continual economy; however, soon it desires to complete the drainage of the Roseau basin.

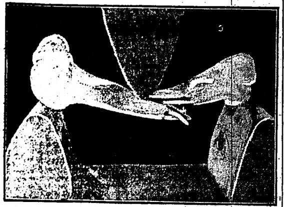
EFFECT OF FOOD UPON BREAKING STRENGTH OF BONES

Interesting and Valuable Experiment with Hogs—By E. A. Burnett, Director Nebraska Agricultural College.



Showing Bone Between the Anvils of Testing Machine After Breaking.

The purpose of the experiment was to determine the effect of different classes of food on the breaking strength of bones in growing pigs, as an indication of the food requirements for hogs which are to be used for breeding purposes.

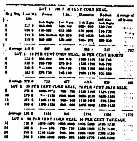


Table 1—Breaking Strength of Bones. Pigs Fed for Twenty-Two Weeks on Different Foods. Initial Weight of Pigs About Sixty-Two Pounds.

A study of the breaking strength of the leg bones in the pigs which were under the test brings out some interesting facts. An effort was made in the selection of all the pigs in each lot to secure animals of uniform character and weight. All the pigs used were of one breed. There is still considerable difference in the breaking strength of the bones in different individuals of the same lot, which must be considered as an individual difference and which we have not been able to overcome by selection. As there were eight leg bones broken in each hog, or 32 bones in each lot, the very marked difference in the average breaking strength can only be attributed to the effect of difference in the food of the animals while they were under experiment.

The lot of 20 pigs put on experiment August 2, 1907, were continued for 22 weeks until January 3, 1908. They were killed at South Omaha, January 8, 1908. The carcasses hung for 48 hours in the cooler and the humerus, radius and ulna were removed from each fore leg, and the femur and tibia from the hind leg. These were brought at once to the experiment station and cleaned so that they could be subjected to test.

They were broken under the supervision of the department of applied mechanics. Every effort was made to secure a very accurate test. The points of contact in the machine were made exactly the same for all bones of the same class, though for short bones like the humerus the bearings were necessarily closer than in the femurs and the radiuses and ulnas. In two instances bones which were found to have been previously cracked were rejected. The results are shown in table 1.

Although this machine did not break the bones with a blow, such as might be expected when broken in the animal, they were all broken under exactly the same conditions and hence their relative strength could be carefully determined.

It will be seen from this table that there is a gradual increase in the strength of these bones per hundred weight of hog and that the greater strength is not a matter simply of the more rapid growth and heavier weight of the pig resulting from these supplementary feeds.

The laboratory examination of these bones also reveals a marked difference in the thickness of the walls as shown by the X-ray photographs.

The laboratory tests have also shown that there is no apparent increase in the external measurements of the bones resulting when protein or mineral matter is added to the food nutrients, but that these additional nutrients, so far as they are assimilated, have greatly added to the thickness of the bone walls by accretion on the inner surface of these walls, thereby reducing the marrow within the bone.

The thickness of the bone wall increased about 50 per cent. in those fed bone meal over those fed only corn. The per cent. of mineral matter and the specific gravity in the green bones increased in nearly the same proportion as the thickness of the walls.

This extreme difference in the breaking strength of the bones of the different lots indicate that the skim-milk, the tankage and the ground bone each contained some substance in which the corn was deficient that was available for bone building purposes. Since the increased mineral matter in the bones is largely phosphate of lime, and since the skim-milk, tankage and ground bone are each rich in phosphate of lime, it is fair to look upon the phosphates in these foods as the determining factor in the building up of the bones in the pigs fed.

Insist on Stable Cleanliness.—In the production of commercial milk, the dairyman must not only keep himself and his cows clean, but he must not draw the milk from the cow in a stable filled with dust. He never should feed hay before milking. He should not feed grain nor disturb the bedding before milking. I may get into an argument in regard to this statement, declares a writer in Orange Judd Farmer, for there are those who claim that the stable should be cleaned before the milking is done. I maintain not, for you know the more you disturb some things the worse they smell. The dairyman must not feed silage before he milks, for if contamination of the air of the stable occurs with the acid odor of silage, the milk will certainly be tainted. It may not be detected at once, but the city neighbor who attempts to use this milk 48 hours old, will certainly detect an unpleasant flavor.

THE STORY OF ONE BIG POULTRY RAISING PLANT

Will Accommodate 6,000 Laying Hens—All Feed Grown on the Ground for the Hens.

The accompanying diagrams taken from the Los Angeles Times give the details of the buildings and grounds of one of the big poultry plants of California. Something like 6,000 laying hens can be comfortably accommodated. The incubator house is 16 by 60 feet with a capacity of 7,200 chicks per month, is double-walled with air floors. The feeding and harvesting of the crop of hen fruit is done from the alleys, economy of labor being reduced to a minimum. Alfalfa is sown in the yards, through which there is a running stream of fresh water. The entire arrangement is such that the plant can be easily managed by one man. In addition to the yards and artificial hatching conveniences these machines for grinding grain and grit, for cutting green bone, and for mixing feeds, a carpenter shop for building crates, packing and shipping cases, and a big iron shed into which is dumped the refuse straw and litter from pens and nests and immediately burned on this conveyance as it is gathered. Though only recently completed the plant has already demonstrated paying qualities, and will ultimately possess a hatching capacity of much larger numbers and that the total average number of laying hens will be something over 6,000 heads.

The brooder-house is 216 feet long by 16 feet wide, with sand bunkers and feed apartments at the side. At present there are 1,200 laying hens, yielding something like 600 eggs, per day. The plant grows its own grain, which is fed to the birds in the shock, in the large 180 by 200-foot yards, thus affording ideal inducement to exercise. The houses are 12 by 24 feet with open front and concrete

CONTROLLING COLOR IN SHORTHORNS

By Prof. James Wilson, of Ireland.

After a thorough study of the matter we are able to offer the following conclusions concerning the possibilities of fixing color among shorthorn cattle:

1. Red crossed by red should give red calves.
2. White crossed by white should give white calves.
3. Red crossed by white should give roans.
4. Roans inbred should give reds, white and roans in the proportion 1, 1, 2.
5. Roans crossed by reds should give roans and reds in equal proportion.
6. Roans crossed by whites should give roans and whites in equal proportion.

Four hundred and thirty-eight reds crossed by reds gave 413 reds and 25 roans.

Three whites crossed by whites gave three whites.

Five hundred and fourteen roans crossed by roans gave 152 reds, 278 roans and 84 whites.

Four hundred and fifty-six roans crossed by reds gave 226 reds and 230 roans.

Twenty-three roans crossed by whites gave 14 roans and nine whites.

If the shorthorn breeder wishes to avoid whites he is limited to three crosses—red with red, red with roan, and red with white. Whites are obtained when whites are bred together, when whites are bred with roans, or when roans are bred together.

A Bright Outlook.—Grasp what it will mean to farm communities and rural towns, to have even better and more practical schooling for young and old of both sexes than the cities, exclaims Orange Judd Farmer. It means that country life is going to be the most attractive life—that farming will be the most profitable of occupations, that land values will increase and social position and usefulness of the farmer's family be enormously enhanced.

The Mule.—A mule is an artistic kicker and he has a mind of his own. These two things are enough to influence some farmers against him.

Keep Them Growing.—The condition of the colts will depend almost as much upon their care as the feed they receive.

Wasted Advice.

"It's the little things that count. Don't be a grump. Compliment your wife on her new hat when you go home to-night."

"My wife ain't got any new hat," responded the other party to the sidewalk conversation with a rueful smile.

"Whither are we drifting?" demanded the grocery orator.

"Toward the codfish barrel," unexpectedly answered the proprietor. "But [illegible] use, boys. That barrel was cleaned out during the debate last night."

GROWING TOMATOES FOR THE MARKET

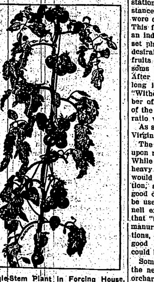
Next to the Potato It Stands at Head of Garden Vegetables in Commercial Importance.

In a recent bulletin of the West Virginia station, W. M. Munson says:

Next to the potato, the tomato stands, perhaps, at the head of the list of garden vegetables in commercial importance. In Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware, Ohio, Indiana, and to a rapidly increasing extent in West Virginia, the crop is of special importance, while the greenhouses of New York and New England and the newly developed truck fields of Florida endeavor to supply the demand for this fruit in winter.

By far the larger portion of the area devoted to this crop is employed in supplying fruit for the canning factories, and it is the demand of the canneries which more than any other has given the great impetus to tomato culture.

The opinion is expressed that "as a simple business proposition, however, tomato growing offers excellent opportunities at this time."



Single-Stem Plant in Forcing House, Showing Method of Tying Fruit Cluster.

Prof. Munson summarizes his 20 years' experience in the culture of tomatoes in the field and in the greenhouse substantially as follows:

Field Culture.—One of the most important problems in tomato culture is that of earliness. As a rule, plants purchased of the local dealers are drawn and "leggy," being crowded together in small boxes. When set in the field where too often the soil is hard and dry, the shock is such that several weeks are required for the plants to recover and no fruit sets until late in the season. In general, these weak drawn plants are not worth setting.

Frequent transplanting before setting in the field is the best method of securing strong, stocky, well-developed plants. The practice usually followed by the writer has been to sow the seeds in hotbeds, or in shallow boxes in the greenhouses, about April 1. When the first true leaves have well started, or as soon as the plants begin to crowd, transfer to two-inch pots, and later to three-inch and four-inch if occasion demand. As a rule, however, in this climate it will be unnecessary to handle the plants more than twice. In the absence of pots the plants may be handled in boxes, or even in the bed; but pot-grown plants are always preferable, as they are checked less by removal to the field. In the field the plants are set about four by five feet. Many would plant closer, but on reasonably rich ground the plants will cover the whole surface if set at this distance.

The plants should be set in the field as soon as danger from frost is past. It has commonly been taught that any chill is nearly fatal to young tomato plants; but as shown by the writer's work at Cornell university and at the Maine experiment station, "a chill is not as fatal to success as is commonly supposed." At the Maine station it was found that "in every instance, save one, the first ripe fruits were obtained from plants set latest." This fact, however, is not necessarily an indication of earliness, as the late-set plants were older than is usually desirable for setting, and the first fruits were in some cases from blossoms formed while in the house. After these had ripened, there was a long interval before others followed. "Without exception the average number of fruits, and the average weight of the product per plant, was in direct ratio with the earliness of setting."

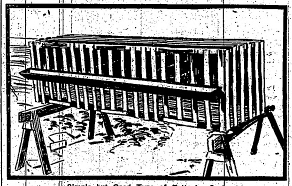
The notion that tomatoes do better upon relatively poor soil is erroneous. While it is doubtful if an excessively heavy application of stable manure would be profitable, a liberal application, such as would be given for a good crop of corn, may nearly always be used with advantage. At the Cornell experiment station it was found that "the results obtained with liberal manuring, under commercial conditions, . . . certainly show that good stable manure in abundance could be used profitably."

Some of the best tomato soils are the newly cleared areas designed for orchard planting. But on these same new soils, an application of about 500 pounds of a good high-grade complete fertilizer will usually be found advantageous.

Trimming the vines in midsummer as a means of hastening maturity and increasing the yield of fruit is frequently recommended, but very seldom practiced, even by amateurs in the writer's experience the results obtained justify greater emphasis of this point. As a result of two successive seasons' work at the Maine experiment station it was found that the total increase in the number of fruits matured, due to trimming, ranged from 5.5 per cent. to 50 per cent. The percentage gain by weight was very marked, and in one instance reached a total of 58 per cent. In these trials the plants were grown under ordinary field culture. They were started in the greenhouse April 1, planted in the field June 1, and headed back July 24, August 8, and September 5. At each trimming the leading branches were shortened about six inches, and most of the side shoots below the first clusters of fruit were removed, the others being shortened. The sunlight was thus freely admitted to the fruit and picking was rendered much easier.

A Good Type of Fattening Crate



Simple but Good Type of Fattening Crate.

The crates are usually made six feet long, 18 to 20 inches high and 18 inches wide. The crate is divided into three compartments, each holding from four to six birds, according to the size of the chicken. The crate is made of slats usually 1½ inches wide by five-eighths of an inch thick. Those in front are placed two inches apart to allow the birds to put their heads through for feeding. The slats on the bottom are placed three-fourths of an inch apart to allow the droppings to go through. Care should be taken not to have the first bottom slat at the filing of his campaign exjenses did not back fit too closely against the back or the droppings will collect and decompose. The slats on the bottom should be one inch by half an inch and run lengthwise of the crate. The slats on the back and top are usually two inches apart. A frame is made of 1½ inch by 1 inch as shown in illustration.

Very fair coops may be made from old packing boxes by taking off the front and bottom and substituting slats in their places. During warm weather these crates may be placed out of doors. They may be protected from the rain by boards laid on top. In cold weather the crates should be placed in a house or shed where they are protected from the raw cold winds. There is a small V-shaped trough arranged in front of the coop for feeding and watering the chickens. This trough is usually made three inches deep of half-inch lumber. It is hung in front of crate by wire. Before the birds are placed in the crates they should be well dusted with sulphur. After the birds are placed in the crates they should be starved for 20 hours and fed very sparingly for a few days till they get accustomed to the change of feed. Overfeeding on the start often has injurious effect on the digestive system.

Rather Ambiguous.

When Weber and Fields were playing together a couple of husky Western visitors, seeing New York for the first time, dropped into the Weber-Fields Museum of Drama to see the show.

"Which is Weber and which is Fields?" asked one, who forgot what a programme was for.

"Derned if I know," replied the other. "But whichever is which, I'd rather be the other one."

DULUTH STEEL OUTLOOK GOOD.

House Committee Believed to Be Satisfied With Plans of Corporation.

The special subcommittee of the house tax committee, which went to Duluth to look into the plans of the Minnesota Steel company and see what is being done and what the prospects are for the establishment of the iron and steel industry in this state on a comprehensive scale, put in a busy day. It is believed that the committee is well satisfied with its investigation.

Chairman L. J. Johnson, speaking for himself, said that he is satisfied that the steel corporation is acting entirely in good faith. The subcommittee will meet in St. Paul and make a report to the general committee the last of this week.

The party spent the forenoon inspecting plans and asking questions of local officials of the steel corporation. In the afternoon the committee visited the site of the new steel works.

"I can speak for myself only," said Mr. Johnson, "as we have had no opportunity to hold a conference. Personally I am convinced that the steel corporation intends to construct a steel plant here.

"I am satisfied that the statements made by the Duluth delegation have been right as to the whole proposition. The situation appears to have been properly represented to us. We are assured that a large amount of preliminary work has been done."

GUARD AGAINST MOTHS.

F. L. Washburn Made Federal Inspector to Watch Importations.

In order to prevent by any chance the introduction into this state of gypsy and brown-tail moths, which have become such a scourge in some of the New England States, and which are being sent to this country at present from France in importations of nursery stock, the United States department of agriculture has appointed F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, federal inspector for Minnesota, with instructions to examine all foreign importations most rigidly, notification of the shipments of which will be sent from Washington.

It is apparently the plan of the department to have such goods come through in bond to the St. Paul custom house and be examined there. In this connection and in order to familiarize the people of the state with the appearance of some of these pests the Minnesota entomologist is asking for a small appropriation to place colored charts of these insects and some of the insect-eating birds in all the public schools in the state, over 1,000 in number.

OLMSTED COUNTY TO HAVE FAIR

Outgrowth of Children's Display of Their Own Products.

Olmsted county has a fair association again. A number of years ago the Southern Minnesota Fair association went out of business for various reasons, and since that time Rochester has had no fair.

Three or four years ago County Superintendent George F. Howard started in a small way what he called the "Olmsted county school children's agricultural fair." It was held in the fall of the year in some hall in the city, and the boys and girls of the country schools placed on exhibition vegetables, etc., raised by themselves, also fancy work, aprons and such articles.

The project grew and grew as the young folks' interest increased. The idea outgrew itself and the Commercial club of Rochester took the matter up. After a conference with Mr. Howard, it was decided to organize a fair association and enlarge upon the school fair plans.

PHONE INTERESTS ORGANIZE.

The Seventh Congressional District Telephone Association of Minnesota was formally organized at Granite Falls as the result of an informal meeting of several telephone companies at Willmar, Minn., on Jan. 15. Rev. J. O. Lundberg of the Kandiyohi County Telephone company, E. P. Kelly of Cottonwood and E. R. Rasmusson of Svea were the active promoters and issued the call for the Granite Falls meeting.

A constitution and by-laws were adopted and the following officers were elected: E. P. Kelly, president; A. O. Gimestad of Belview, first vice president; F. E. Bentley of Montevideo, second vice president; Lucius T. Clark of Bellingham, secretary, and E. R. Rasmusson, treasurer.

General discussion of the independent telephone interests of the district was indulged in and various resolution as to rates and proposed legislation were passed.

After all this fuss and feathers it appears that there is no way to reach the Standard Oil company for rebating. Let's see; just what is the net result of the prosecutions under the Sherman act.

Congressman Tawney asserts that the United States is spending 70 per cent of its revenue for wars past and prospective. It does seem about time to call a halt, for if we ever have a war there won't be any money left to prosecute it.

The village elections indicte rapid trend toward no license. In view of the fact that so many of the cities and villages are going "dry," there is little question but two-thirds of the state would be without saloons if a county option law is passed.

The legislature is dreadfully afraid Governor Johnson will not give the old soldier a fair deal, but it forgets that out of the entire bunch of legislative clerks and hangers-on there are only three old soldiers, although the law gives them a preference.

It is estimated that 73,000 citizens of the United States—1,500 from Minnesota—settled in Canada during 1908. Of course a good many of them will come back, but 'twere better they had never gone. The Red River valley offers better inducements to farmers and dairymen than does Canada, and we could take care of 100,000 new settlers easily.

A bad liver is a public enemy, says an exchange. It is morose and growly and picks fault in everything. It breaks up families and creates dissensions among neighbors. It is suspicious, envious, and quarrelsome. There is nothing the state need get after, on the score of the general welfare, more than the bad, vile and riotous livers which occupy the land.

The impression is general that the republican leaders have decreed defeat of the tonnage tax. The St. Peter Free Press, in discussing this issue, says:

"From the way things look at the state capitol we are inclined to believe that the tonnage tax bill is doomed to an inglorious defeat. The steel trust's persuading eloquence is too much for our country solons and they seem to feel that the trust is right and the people are wrong. Perhaps later on the lawmakers will be asked to explain how it all happened."

There is more mreit in the opinion of the Colorado secretary of the burearu of child and animal protection that parents of bad children should be punished for misconduct of their offspring than one would suppose at first thought. If the state had the power to bring parents to the bar of justice when their children went wrong, declarees the Brooklyn Standard-Union, there would perhaps be a more determined effort to see that boys and girls lived in accordance with the ideals of civilization.

Congressman James A. Tawney, through his attorneys, has served upon the Albert Lea Tribune the complaint in a suit for alleged damages for the publication of an article in connection with the controversy between President Roosevelt and congress on the secret service. The language to which Mr. Tawney objects and upon which he rests his claim for $10,000 damages originally appeared in the Philadelphia North American, afterwards was copied by the St. Paul Dispatch and was reprinted in the Albert Lea Tribune.

The Redwood Gazette gives the following account of the rise and fall of a brilliant Minnesota man:

"Prof. J. S. Carlson, a former brilliant instructor in Gustavus Adolphus college at St. Peter, recently touched bottom in his rapid descent by the whiskey route from fame and usefullness to the depths of degradation, and was last heard of in a Spokane jail, where he developed a case of erysipelas. Prof. Carlson speaks five languages and went from Gustavus Adolphus to accept a chair of modern languages in the state university. Before this, during the '90s, he was elected to the legislature, defeating present Gov. Johnson, and at another time defeated present Congressman Davis for nomination for a state position. He has a wife and children at Minneapolis, and if we are not mistaken, left that city under a cloud after falling down a high embankment along the Mississippi river in that city during a spree. Education and ability raise no barriers to the inroads of the drink devil."

Mankato Free Press: There is no profession or occupation so underpaid as that of school teachers. And there is no profession or occupation that ought to be better paid. St. Peter Herald: The departure of President Roosevelt makes it possible for Senator Nelson and Congressman Tawney to resume, their White House calls, suspended nearly a year ago. This gives color to the rumor that masterly inactivity is to be the watchword of the Taft adminstratiiioon.

Hibbing Mesaba Ore: Mr. Taft threw an awful jolt into the party worshipers by selecting two democrats for his cabinet. Mr. Taft is evidently bigger than his party and that augurs well for the nation.

Life is made up of choices. The young man who decides that the first essential in a successful career is to make a practice of getting drunk by the time he is twenty, will be out of the running at thirty. He will be working for another. His choice was wrong, says the LaMoure Cronicle.

His companion who decided that he could be a good fellow without descending to low practices will be an employer at 40, other things being equal.

The pool room patron of 20 will not know much of the history of his country at 30. He will be in the ranks of those who complain that a fellow does not get a fair chance in this world. His companion who makes the choice of evenings well spent at twenty will not be looking for a job at 40. He will make the job for himself.

Nothing in this you say? Let no young man deceive himself on this point. The world is made up of leaders who as boys made right choices.

Living is a serious business. Here are prizes to gain, but they are not to be had for the asking. Read the biography of a man who is promoted at 45 or 50. In every instance, you will find he may have remained apparently in a stationary position for fifteen years of his life. But you will find also that he worked to an end during those fifteen years.

Industry is not "working" for somebody and then going home at night with folded hands. It is doing "on the side" in spare moments the work that fits one for life later on. Try it in faith. The dark places will disappear as the years pass, and later on you will look back and say: "I made the right choice when I was 20. I can see it now in result."

TAFT'S CABINET.

Declaring the Taft cabinet to be strongly trust-tinctured, William J. Bryan in the Commoner last week, comments as follows:

"Does the President's cabinet strike you as a reform cabinet?

"Secretary of State Knox, ex-attorney of the Steel trust—after conference with Mr. Frick he, as attorney-general, advised the killing of the only anti-trust bill passed by the house in recent years. Is he likely to encourage the President to attack the trusts?

"Secretary of War Dickenson, attorney for the Illinois Central railway—an ex-democrat drawn away from his party by his corporate connections.

"Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh—ex-democrat; left the party when it separated from Wall street.

"Secretary of Commerce and Labor Nagel—Attorney for the Standardl Oil trust.

"Attorney General Wickersham—Not known for any activity in connection with the regulation of railroads or the prosecutor of monopolies of a national character.

"When has a chief executive selected a more conservative cabinet? There are no reformers in it; the progressive element of the republican party is as completely ignored as was the progressive element by Mr. Cleveland during his second administration. Will the result be the same?"

PRIMARY LAW WILL STAY.

The state sentae last Thursday defeated both the Canfield and the Moonan primary bills, and it is improbable that any change will be made at this session. Senator Canfield's bill was a modification of the law amountting practically to a repeal, while Senator Moonan's bill extended the system to state officers.

Senator Moonan made an eloquent and appealing talk in favor of his state wide primary bill. He said that the newpaper have charged him with intending to make clear the pathway of Governor Johnson to the senatorship, but that that was not true. To prove it he had consented to strike out of the bill, at the urgent request of members of the election committee, the provision extending the primary to the nomination of United States senators. He yielded to nobody in point of admiration for Governor Johnson, who has made the state famous all over the nation, and who will be the first president the country has ever had from the territory west of the Mississippi. The bill is not in the interests of him, however, or of any other individual or of any party. It is no more a democratic measure than it is a republican measure. Senator Moonan quoted a number of republicans in favor of the primary election system, including A. L. Cole and J. F. Jacobson, the latest repulbican candidates for governor, and President Taft, Governaor Hughes of New York, Governor Stubbs of Nebraska, Senator Crawford of South Dakota, Senator Beverage of Indiana and Francis J. Heney of San Fransisco. He quoted Dar Reese of St. Paul against the bill, representing him as having blamed the primary system for the election of a democratic governor in this state.

"If the primary system defeated the last three republican candidates for governor," asked Mr. Moonan, "what elected the other republican state officers?" The present bill, he said, met several objections that have been raised to the primary election system. The objection that it is limited is met by expanding it. The objection that it permits the intermingling of party voters is met by a provision that party affiliations of all voters shall be registered at primary elections, which would tend to keep the voters in their proper primaries.

Mrs. Jos. Brohmann, living in the northern part of Red Lake Falls, Minn., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble and rheumatism for several years. A dull pain in the small of my back was very severe and I often suffered from headaches and felt anguid and listless all the time. I was very nervous, my back was weak and I knew by the unnatural appearance of the kidney secretions that my kidneys were disordered. I finally sent to W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store, procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and had had only used them a short time when I felt a great deal better. The secretions from my kidneys have become clear, and I now suffer but little from pains in my back."

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescripts on forces the clogged-up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disoders or Rheumatism.

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

There is an evaporation from the body going on continually, day and night, through the pores and glands of the skin. This is nature's way of maintaining the proper temperature of our systems and preserving the softness and flexibility of the skin, and so long as the blood is free from impurities no trouble will result. When, however, the blood from any cause becomes infected with humors and acids, these too must be expelled, and coming in contact with the delicate fibres and tissues with which the skin is so abundantly supplied they produce irritation and inflammation, and the effect is shown by Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and skin affections of various kinds. These impurities and humors get into the blood through a deranged or inactive condition of the system; the members whose duty it is to carry off the waste and refuse matter of the body fail to properly perform their work, and this impure, fermenting matter is left in the system to be absorbed by the blood. The skin is not only affected by poisons generated within the system, but poisons from without, such as Poison Oak, Poison Ivy, Nettle Rash, etc., enter through the open pores and glands, and so thoroughly do they become rooted in the blood that they are ever present, or return at certain seasons of each year to torment the sufferer. Salves, washes, lotions, etc., cannot cure skin diseases. True, such treatment relieves some of the itching and discomfort, and aids in keeping the skin clean, but it does not reach the real cause, and at best can be only palliating and soothing. A thorough cleansing of the blood is the only certain cure for skin diseases. S. S. S., a gentle acting, safe blood purifier, made entirely of vegetable ingredients of the forest and field, is the proper treatment. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation, and neutralizes the acids and humors, thoroughly cleansing and purifying the blood, and curing skin affections of every kind. It supplies to the blood the fresh, nutritive qualities necessary to sustain the skin and all other parts of the body, and rids the blood of any and all poisons. S. S. S. cures Eczema, Tetter, Acne, Salt Rheum, Poison Oak and Ivy, Nettle Rash, and all other skin troubles, and cures them permanently by removing every trace of the cause from the blood. Special book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write.

I have used your S. S. S., spring and fall, for the past two years, with the result that it entirely relieved me of a form of Eczema which my doctor was unable to cure. My arms, lower limbs, and, in fact, the biggest portion of my whole body was affected, and when I first began S. S. S. the itching, etc., was worse, but I continued the remedy with the result that the dry, itching eruption entirely disappeared. I think a great deal of your medicine, and have recommended it to others with good results. It is the best blood medicine made, and I can conscientiously recommend it for the cure of all blood and skin affections. CHAS. HORSTMAN.

COOPERATIVE BREEDING

Superintendent of Experimental Station Makes Valuable Suggestions

The common cows of Minnesota kept for dairying average only 160 pounds of butter yearly. Common cows of the dairy type kept on the northeast experiment farm have averaged 250 pounds of butter yearly. Dairy bred cows kept on the experiment farm at St. Anthony Park have averaged over 300 pounds of butter yearly.

Between the common cows of the state, and the common cows of kept on the N. E. Experiment Farm there is a differance of 90 pounds of butter a year, or a cash differance of $22.50. This is due to a differance in care and feeding, and lack of judicious selection on the part of the farmer, keeping a cow regardless of her type and performance.

Between the common cows of the state and the dairy bred cows on the Experiment Farm at St. Anthony Park there is a difference of 140 pounds of butter yearly or a cash differencee of $35 due to a lack of breeding along with the other causes mentioned, feeding, care and selection. No further argument is necessary to show the importance of improvement in the dairy herd of the average farm.

Improvement in the dairy herd of the average farm: Improvement must begin with better feed and more of it. Clover and fodder corn and roots must replace the marsh hay for winter feed and the brush pasture must be cleared up and disked and sown to clover, timothy and blue grass for summer feed.

The barns must be so constructed that the cows will be comfortable during the half year they must be kept in doors, and the dairy work so systemized that the feeding and milking will be done with regularity.

The dairy cow that will produce six, eight and even ten thousand pounds of milk in a single year is the greatest improvement on nature that has been made, and she wont do it unless she is protected and fed and cared for just in proporiton. When her conditions are similiar and sometimes worse than those of the wild cow under natural conditions on the plains she will go back to what nature intended her to do, give milk enough for her young.

Better conditions does not mean conditions so expensive that they are impractical for the average farmer. The log barn built by the farmer himself for his few cows may be made as comfortable, and cleanly, and in every way as suitable for a dairy barn as need be.

The big barn and the big expense don't necessarily make the profitable cow. It is in doing well, the every day details of dairy work, and in having a cow that is capable in dairy work, of producing from 250 to 300 pounds of butter a year when her conditions are made favorable to that production.

Improving the Breed: There are three essential parts to improving the dairy herd, 1st, feed, care, etc., 2nd selection of the individual cow that is a good producer, and this can be known only thru keeping a record of the milk and butter produced by each individual cow, and 3rd by using a dairy bred sire of known dairy quality that will transmit this quality to his heifers.

To get a sire that will make improvement in his heifers over the common cow, it is generally necessary to go outside the neighborhood. Unfortunately pure bred dairy herds are scarce. The cost of a pure bred sire is generally from $75 to $100, a price that the average frontier farmer feels that he cannot afford to pay. By eight or ten farmers clubbing together the amount for each one to pay would not be as much as the cost of a scrub animal, and one sire will do for eight or ten of the average herds as well as one.

To carry this cooperation still further and to secure the greatest improvement at the least expense, it is planned for all the farmers of the township to cooperate and buy 4 or 5 sires of the same breed, but unrelated. Have one sire for every ten herds, and exchange from one community of herds to another every two years so that inbreeding would not be practiced. In this way the sires could be kept for eight or ten years. As it is the sire is often disposed at 3 or 4 years of age which is only at the beginning of their greatest usefulness and power of transmission. The best heifers are from the mature sires.

This plan of breeding has already been adopted by one community of the farmers in northern Minnesota, the farmers of the meadow cooperative creamery association of Berner, Clearwater county.

They bought 5 pure bred sires in cooperation under the plan previously outlined. Within a few years that farming community will be noted for the breed of cattle they have selected. They are noted now for being the first association of farmers in the state to take up this plan of cooperative cattle breeding. It is further worthy of note that these farmers live in a backwoods section, twenty-five miles from a railroad station. Their local creamery is their market, and when they haul a load from there to the railway, over their long road, it is a ton of butter, worth today some $600.

Dairying is the industry for the great majority of farmers of Northern Minnesota and we should all pursue this wise policy of improving our common cows. The experiment farm is in position to assist the farmers in securing breeding stock. We are in cooperation with several breeders in this section of the state and we have a large number of animals to select from aside from the Experiment Farm herd.

The plan is for the Experiment Farm to cooperate with every farmer's association and every farmer who buys a breeding amimal, and to act as a medium of exchange if desired.

High grade sires of good quality will be sold at a medium price to farmers who cannot afford a pure bred animal, and where a cooperative association cannot be formed. Where there is a cooperative creamery there should be a cooperative breeders' association.

Where the cooperative creamery does not exist, a cooperative breeding association would be the best movement that could be made toward the creamery.

Cooperation is the most potent factor toward industrial and business success in the world today. It is just as important in farming as it is to any other industry. The cooperative creamery is the very foundation of successful dairying. A cooperative breeding association that requires only from $100 to $150 from every ten farmers will prove the greatest factor toward making the successful creamery.

THIEF RIVER FALLS

From the News and Press.

Mrs. Robt. Lee who has been suffering from an attack of typhoid fever for the past two weeks is now well along the road to recovery.

County Treasurer O. T. Tandberg, accompanied by his wife and youngest daughter, came up from Red Lake Falls on Saturday for a short visit with friends.

Michael Torgerson was in from Reiner last week. He states that in company with his brother, Knute, he recently purchased the Reiner store from Reinhart Jonsrud. They will remove the store to the location of the new creamery this spring.

Last week a deal was closed which transferred the F. H. Kratka residence just north of the Presbyterian church to Rev. Neil A. Gilchrist. This is one of the finest properties in the city and it is with feeling of regret that the Kratka family turn it over to the purchaser.

The location of the new creamery in the town of Reiner has been decided upon. It will be in the northeast corner of Section 29. Torgerson Bros. have purchased the Johnsrud store and will move it over to the creamery site. It is also reported that Julius Halvorson is busy making arrangements to move his store to a place opposite the creamery on Section 20.

This pavalion may be used for picnic purposes, card parties, dancing or any other form of amusement. It will be shady, rain proof and mosquito proof and consequently should prove immensly popular. By way of a starter, arrangements are being pushed to give a basket party next Saturday evening for the purpose of getting the necessary funds started. At the basket party an association will be formed and officers chosen to handle the project and push it to a successful finish.

A failing tiny nerve—no larger than the finest silken thread—takes from the Heart its impulse, its regularity. The Stomach also has its hidden or inside nerve. It was Dr. Shoop who first told us it was wrong to drug a weak or failing Stomach, Heart or Kidneys. His prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed straight for the cause of these ailments—these weak and faltering inside nerves. This, no doubt clearly explains why the Restorative has of late grown so rapidly in popularity. Druggists say that those who test the Restorative even for a few days soon become fully convinced of its wonderful merit. Anyway, don't drug the organ. Treating the cause of sickness is the only sensable and successful way. Sold by all dealers.

Is Woman's Suffrage to Be Society's New Fad

There was laughter when a band of seventeen women, wearing yellow sashes, paraded up Broadway in New York one fine morning, followed by a crowd numbering several thousand. They were representatives of seventeen suffrage clubs, federated into the Interurban Woman Suffrage council.

Men nudged one another, and small boys wore the proverbial small boy's grin. There was no lack in jeers, either, and when finally the leaders mounted a taxicab, which they hailed, catcalls and jeers arose from the rude men.

"They are perfectly horrid," declared Maud Malone. "They are brutes," hotly supplemented Mary Coleman. And when they attempted to speak deafening cries arose.

But that was before woman suffrage was taken up by the women of the 400.

Abandoning, for the nonce, concerts, balls, dinners and hounds, certain leaders of society—with a vim and a go—took up the cause of the woman-deprived-of-her-vote.

On Dec. 21, 1908, Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, who had been suspected of quietly spreading the propaganda of the militant sisterhood among her friends, openly announced her allegiance to the cause at a meeting in her home in New York, when there was formed the Equal Franchise league. Among those who then and there became members of the league, which was formed to assist other suffrage associations, were Mrs. Philip Lydig, belle of Newport; Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Mrs. Richard Aldrich, Mrs. Frederick Nathan. Later there were enlisted in the movement Mrs. Robert Goelet, Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. James Burden, Mrs. Foxhall Keene, Mrs. Richard Stevens and Miss Caroline Duer.

So that now when the suffragettes meet there is a bating of breath, and if there are smiles they make no noise. Curiously, however, there has risen in society an anti-suffrage movement, which, however, is not as vigorous, it appears, as the other.

With the ladies—and their purses—of the 400 actively enlisted in the cause of woman suffrage, the male citizen who, whether because of narrow-mindedness or prejudice, opposes it, may look with awe upon the ominous headlines cabled from London:

"Mob of 15,000 Suffragettes Parades the Streets."

"Mob of 5,000 Invades Parliament."

"Clothing Torn From Fighting Suffragettes."

"Suffragette Army—Fiery Addresses—Woman Breaks in Parliament."

"Women Chain Themselves to the Seats of the House."

And the prejudiced man may begin to wonder.

That the women of the 400 assume that the movement is important is unmistakable. The newest fad has eclipsed pale-blue teas, pale-blue-ribboned dogs and pale-blue-blooded horses for sheer breathless interest.

For many years the suffrage leaders in this country openly declared they were at sea—or rather in a wilderness—and they needed a modern woman Moses to lead them to victory. They needed a leader such as the countess of Warwick in England—a woman of intelligence and high social position, whose attempts would obviate ridicule.

That Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay will fulfill this expectation they declare is without doubt.

Whether the anti-suffrage movement, which is headed by Mrs. Paul Morton, Mrs. Gilbert Jones and others, will make much headway is still uncertain. But the situation is not without interest. An irreverent outsider might compare it to a disagreement as to which is preferable, cafe parfait or "lover's delight."

Mrs. Philip Lydig.

However, both factions are holding meetings. From point of view of attendance the women of society would like to vote. Apropos of this, Mrs. Phil Lydig said she is not so anxious to vote herself as to secure the privilege for working women.

Mrs. Mackay has already taken the stump. That her co-workers are no less vitally engrossed in the subject may be indicated by rumors that Mrs. Lydig has temporarily lost interest in her gowns, that Mrs. Vanderbilt has become indifferent to her dogs, and Mrs. Gould totally has forgotten many things that interested her.

Rival meetings of the suffragettes and "antis" are held; so are rival luncheons and teas.

Mrs. Mackay made her debut as a suffrage speaker at a luncheon of the Interurban Woman Suffrage council at the Hotel Astor on Jan. 15.

By Mrs. Mackay at the table sat Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the "heavy" authority of the international movement, who beamed upon Mrs. Mackay as the "new recruit." There was Col. Harvey, who had joined Mrs. Mackay's league—oh, yes, men have been induced to join—and by him the cream of the elite, among them Mrs. James Burden, Mrs. Foxhall Keene, Miss Dorothy Whitney, Mrs. Newbold Morris, Miss Helen Brice, Miss Caroline Duer and Mrs. Robert Goelet.

If these two women represent beauty in the movement, then Mrs. George J. Gould and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., represent position.

Mrs. Gould is noted for her fondness for entertaining. At "Georgian Court," the magnificent country estate of Mrs. Gould, at Lakewood, N. J., she has given notable concerts. In the splendid theater manuscript plays have been rendered by the most accomplished actors. At the opera she is always a parterre hostess.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, who has arraigned herself under the suffrage flag, was Mrs. George J. Gould.

Miss Virginia Fair, daughter of Senator Fair, of California. She was considered one of the most beautiful heiresses in the country. Recently reports have been spread to the effect that Mrs. Vanderbilt and her husband have separated. She has not, however, given up interest in the woman's movement.

Whether the result of the conversion of the leaders of the "Smart Set" to woman suffrage will be that they will chain themselves to posts at street corners or houses of government, fight with the police and mob city halls as they have done in England is still a question.

Already the suffragettes have had trouble with the police in New York. Not long ago a meeting was broken up in Columbus Circle, where Mrs. Boerman Wells attempted to speak. So long as the discussions are reserved to the drawing rooms of the leaders and th esocial clubs it is not probable that the inconsiderate and social clubs it is not probable that the inconsiderate and unadvanced "guardians of the law" will interfere. One thing is certain: whereas men laughed before, now at least when leaders of society's 400 take the stump they will pause and listen in silence.

There is nothing like prestige

Missouri Doctor Lost His Coat Tails.

Dr. A. R. Conrad, with his wife, has been for several days in St. Louis attending the meetings at the Coliseum. Sunday evening Dr. and Mrs. Conrad found themselves shut out. Flourishing around in the crowd to get near, Dr. Conrad suddenly found to his chagrin that the long coat tails of his overcoat were fastened in the door when the door had closed. In vain he called, in vain he begged. No usher heard him.

The imprisonment was not comfortable, to be standing on the top of a narrow step in the cold with one's coat tails held in a vise. The physician resolved to make a surrender; he whipped out his pocket knife and severed the tails from the coat, and he and Mrs. Conrad then went home to their host's house.

EARTHQUAKE WON THE HOLE.

Golfer's Story of Strange Agency That Helped Him in India.

Earthquakes and their terrible consequences have been a sad subject of discussion lately, and one is minded to tell in this column a story of how an earthquake was once associated with a game of golf, the story being as remarkable as it is true.

Every golfer knows or has heard of that grand veteran of the old school, Col. E. H. Kennard, who for many years past has occupied the distinguished and honorable position of field marshal of the Royal Blackheath club. The incident happened in a foursome played out on a course in India, in which his soon took part.

The other side had played a very fine lie to a certain hole, the ball being laid dead only about a foot from the pin. Kennard's partner played the odd, the ball stopping about three yards from the hole. So Kennard himself had to play the two more, and he was walking up to their ball to do so when, to his blank amazement, he saw both balls begin to move and roll.

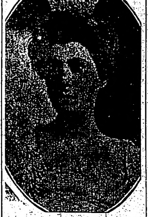
They had been at perfect rest for an appreciable space of time, and there was no visible cause for their movement. See what happened? The balls kept on slowly rolling, and the opponents' ball was running away from the hole all the time and finally came to a stop about four yards away. But the ball of Kennard and his partner ran toward the hole and went in, so that it had to be reckoned as having been holed from the last shot, the odd. The other side had thus only their four yards put back for the half and they missed, Kennard and his partner thus winning the hole.

It was an earthquake, as was ascertained beyond doubt, that caused the balls to move, and so a hole has been won and lost through this strange agency. I have heard many stories of remarkable happenings on the links, but this, which is known to few people, is, I think, quite the most remarkable of its kind.

Where Was He?

Old Mr. Flaherty was a general favorite in the little town where he lived. The doctor was away all one summer and did not hear of the old man's death. Soon after his return he met Miss Flaherty and inquired about the family, ending with:

"And how is your father standing the heat?"



Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay.

HOLDING OUT IN ONE

Golfer's Ambition—Club That Offers Reward for the Feat

The legitimate ambition of every golfer—short of winning the open championship—is to hole out in one, that is to drive the ball from the tee into the hole on the putting green in a single stroke.

Mr. Stuart Anderson, a prominent member of the Portrush Club, has achieved this distinction on no less than seven separate occasions—twice at North Berwick and twice at Aberdeen. A good many professionals, however, have holed out in one on two occasions, and an amateur, T. Ireland, has actually managed to do so twice in the same round.

By the way, it may not be generally known that under certain circumstances something more than mere honor and glory attaches to the accomplishment of this feat. Thus if it is achieved at what is known as the island hole of the Royal Ashdown Forest club during the progress of a quarterly competition the secretary is empowered to presnt the fortunate player with a £5 note. The fund for the purpose of meeting this demand upon the club's resources are obtained from an endowment presented by a wealthy member. So far, however, and despite keen struggle it entails, nobody has yet qualified for the award.

Luck, as will readily be understood, is a factor that enters very largely into golf. Perhaps the most notable case on record is that of Jamie Anderson when competing for the championship at Prestwick in 1878. He had just teed his ball for the seventeenth drive when a little girl standing among the spectators remarked that he had unconsciously placed it just in front of the proper line. Although nobody else had noticed the fact, this proved on examination by the referee to be correct.

Thereupon Anderson teed his ball again in a fresh position well behind the line and made a drive which landed him in the hole and eventually enabled him to win the match. If, however, he had played it from the original spot he would have been penalized a stroke and have lost the championship. Clearly then luck on the links is something to be taken into consideration whatever non-believers may say to the contrary.

Ring in Offertory.

After having taken the collection in the Cullompton parish church the church warden noticed a gentleman's gold ring in the offertory box.

At the conclusion of the service the vicar announced that a gold ring had been either accidentally dropped into the box or given as a thank offering, and would be restored to its owner if put in by mistake. No one claimed the ring.

Ways and Ways of Getting a Wife

That dashing, old-time custom of winning a wife by riding up on a spirited steed, seizing and riding off with her, may possibly be revived.

That is, if other intrepid lovers take courage by the example of Ernest Hunston, a cowboy, who carried off fifteen-year-old Freda Bauer from her home at Hesper, Mont., not long since. It was done in true old-time fashion, the lover holding up the girl's father with a revolver and galloping off with the daughter, who was clad in scanty attire.

For that matter there are many ways of winning a wife, and that of capture is one of the oldest. And if matrimony is pursued by abduction or public sale, while such methods may not be consistent with modern social advancement, it does not lack in elements of the picturesque.

When Charlie calls on Lizzie this evening he may seem slightly nervous and ill at ease. He may twiddle his thumbs and appear distrait when she talks to him. He may stay rather late and grow more nervous at every tick of the clock. He may even rise and give her good night—and then pause at the door. But he will finally sink on one knee, and, seizing Lizzie's hand, nervously draw something—it looks like a ring—from his pocket.

Of course, Lizzie could not think of such a thing. She is almost overcome. But by and by the ring is slipped on her finger, and Charlie begins to regain his nerve as he feels the first thrill of possession.

That is the most modern, and what may be termed the most polite, way of winning a wife. But in other lands they do it differently.

Now, down in Patagonia let us imagine that Wobble-aggle-Rum lets his gaze rest upon the daughter of his rival chief, Rum-Agglewobble. Beneath the thicket where he lies hidden the whites show in Wobble's rolling eyes. He feels his muscle and clicks his teeth, so that the passing maiden starts, as though she heard the traditional twitter of young love in the neighborhood. Down in his heart Wobble knows that another—perchance many another—woos the hand of the divine one; that her father, the chief, sets eyes upon him with the fondness that thirsts for blood. What is he to do?

It is noon. A strange whistle shrills from the thicket. In less time than it takes to pronounce his name, his captains and tribe have arrived. They mount their horses. And on—on they rush; on—on over the sandy plain after the tribe which bears the ebony Psyche of Patagonia to her father's camp. On—on, through thickets; on—on, until finally they rush among the speared retainers of the maid. A fierce struggle. Warriors fall. And in the melee Wobble seizes his adored by her dusky hair and drags her to his horse.

A few hours later he dismounts the panting steed, while his warriors cheerfully spear the retainers of his adored, and with a gleeful smile pinches the ear of his coy captive.

That is the way they do it in Patagonia.

In Norway courtships are long, prearranged, meditated. Possibly such a deed as the western cowboy carried off—in imitation of the Patagonians—was never heard of. There are all sorts of legal settlements, haggling about dowries before the wedding. Finally the fateful day is at hand. From the humble house of the bride the party winds its way to the fjord, where boats are waiting. Wonderfully arrayed is the bride, with a towering headgear. Over the fjord they are carried. Yonder, against the high crag, looms a church steeple. Now the bells ring, they land and the procession, humble and simple, is led on.

Compare the gentleness and precision of such a marriage with that which prevails in many parts of Russia. There an ancient law is observed which relates to your getting just what you pay for. The more money you have the better wife you get. Brides come from $2.50 to $100 each.

Annual auctions are held in the villages of Gschatsk, Lystcheffka and other places. From all parts of the country 300 or more girls are brought in sleighs. At 9 o'clock some fine morning they are lined up from the cathedral to the city hall. You can have your pick—if you have the cash.

Men pass along and look over the fair offerings. If he is pleased with one, a man is privileged to look at her teeth, knock her chest, feel her arms, run his fingers through her hair. Then he names his price.

The market may last a week. Imagine the "leftovers," if you will. A sorry sight, travelers say. But it is also certain that the bride who is carried away and after her wedding put to work is made to earn her price.

That is how they do it in some parts of Russia.

In Japan you would be certain to find a picturesque way of winning a bride. When he proposes to fair Hyacinth Blossom, the wooer sends to her gifts—jewels, a wonderful obi and shimmering silks for a marriage robe. These are retained if he is accepted.

When the wedding occurs great processions are formed, and the bride is carried to the home of her husband's parents, where they perform a mystical ceremony, drinking wine from the same cup. Two candles touching one another are ignited, and the bride remains at the home—a wife.

Wonderful processions mark marriages in Arabia. When a dusky Arab has won a dusky maid he deems it only proper that camels, laden with silks and rich stuffs, go with her to their nuptial tent. Possibly few peoples celebrate a wedding more hilariously.

Of course, these are all different roads to one ending; one man may sink on his knees with a ring, another may seize the maid at night and carry her off astride a horse. As to the success of any method, it doubtless rests with the happy, or unhappy, suitor.

Horticulture at the Capital.

Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture referred at a recent dinner in Washington to the amateur florists who spring up in the suburbs at this season by thousands.

"More florists, perhaps than flowers spring up," he said.

"In a seed shop the other day I heard one of these amateurs complain about the last batch of seed he had bought. After he had ended his complaint he began to ask floral questions.

"'Oh, by the way,' he said, 'what is a hardy rose?'

"'It is one,' growled the dealer, "that doesn't mind your pulling it up by the roots every day to see if it has begun to grow yet.'"

Waiting for King Edward.

An amusing anecdote relating to the king's recent stay at Brighton was related by the Rev. Cecil Maunsell, vicar of Thorpe Malsor, to a gathering of his parishioners.

The reverend gentleman, who vouched for the authenticity of the story, said that a few days ago a boy walked up to his majesty as he was strolling along the esplanade at Hove and said to him:

"Mister, can you tell me the time?"

"Yes," replied the king, taking out his watch, "it is a quarter to 1."

The boy then informed his majesty that he had been waiting two hours to see the blooming king, and added, "I am not going to wait any longer."

"Neither shall I," replied the king, as he resumed his walk. His majesty himself, said Mr. Maunsell, aftewrad related the incident with much gusto.—London Globe.

The Chief Mourner.

The minister had just been giving the class a lesson on the prodigal son. At the finish, to test what attention had been paid to the teaching, he asked: "Who was sorry that the prodigal son had returned?" The most forward youngster in the class breathlessly answered: "The fatted calf."—Home Herald.

SALOME IN HIGH LIFE

Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson, one of whose many spectacular specialties is unconventional dancing, pirouetted in her bare feet before an assemblage of about 100 of the most fashionable women of New York—and three lone men.

She has been here on a visit for several weeks, having come to see Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor and other American friends, who have witnessed some of her lively exploits in England, such as giving public exhibitions of swimming and diving in masculine bathing apparel. This was her first appearance as an entertainer in New York. She has made England gasp many a time.

It was held in the studio of Emil Fuschs, an artist, in the Beaux Arts building. About all that leaked out concerning the dances Lady Constance gave was that her costume was a severely classical one, after the Greek modes, which considered a filmy winding drapery quite sufficient.

The cards of admission were sold only to women of the fashionable world. The price was said to have been considerably higher than the price of Miss Garden's first performance of Salome, when the public paid $10 for each seat.

Device Patented That Registers Eggs as She Lays 'Em.

The dishonest hen, with cannibalistic tendencies, can no longer defraud her employer with impunity, and if she likes eggs for her meals she is in danger of decapitation. Two Wisconsin men have put their heads together, and have perfected a registering device which keeps a record of every egg laid and enables chicken owners to detect any loss through theft or any other agency. This device is in the form of a band that fits over the hen's body. The expansion of the body caused by the emission of the egg causes the band to spread and registers a number. If the indicator shows that a hen is laying more eggs than are collected, and if the owner finds no evidence of theft, he can then be sure that the bird is eating the eggs herself, and either put her in the stew pan and replace her with a more honest fowl or keep such a close watch over her that she will not have an opportunity to indulge her cannibalistic taste. It is impossible to cure a hen of this habit once it is contracted.

Times Had Changed.

Several years ago Lord Clonmel brought to this country a string of race horses, and at the close of the season Phil Dwyer gave a banquet in his honor. Sheriff Tom Dunn of New York was called upon for a speech.

"Faith and this is the wonderful country!" said Dunn. "I was a poor Irish lad and me dear old mother, God rest her soul, hardly had pennies enough to bring me over. And here I am tonight sitting cheek by jowl with Lord Clonmel himself. Why, me friends, back in the old Tipperary days I couldn't get near enough to his lordship to hit him with a shotgun!"

"Being in a hurry to get home from the theater a few days ago, I walked to the corner," Mr. George Alexander says. "An old cabman with his hansom was the first on the rank, but I shook my head at him and called a taxicab.

"As I approached it, the hansom cabby said: 'So, Mr. G. A., you've no use for 'osses now, but you'll 'ave one to take you on the day you're buried.' I went home in that hansom after all."

BABY HORRIBLY BURNED

By Boiling Grease—Skin All Came Off One Side of Face and Head—Thought Her Disfigured for Life.

Used Cuticura: No Scar Left.

"My baby was sitting beside the fender and we were preparing the breakfast when the frying-pan full of boiling grease was upset and it went all over one side of her face and head. Some one wiped the scald with a towel, pulling the entire skin off. We took her to a doctor. He tended her a week and gave me some stuff to put on. But it all festered and I thought the baby was disfigured for life. I used about three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and it was wonderful how it healed. In about five weeks it was better and there wasn't a mark to tell where the scald had been. Her skin is just like velvet. Mrs. Hare, 1, Henry St., South Shields, Durham, England, March 22, 1908."

WATERPROOFING FABRICS.

How Mackintoshes, Sail Cloth and Leather Are Treated.

Fabrics are waterproofed by impregnating them with metallic salts, by coating them with oil, grease and wax, by coating them with India rubber or by treating them with ammoniacal solutions of copper. The first process is applied to sail cloth. The canvas is impregnated with alum or calcium acetate and then immersed in a fixing bath containing soap, which forms insoluble lime or alumina soap in the cloth.

The second process is used for raincoats, imitation leather, etc. The fabric passes between hot rollers and then over a cylinder of wax, etc.

In the third process a solution of India rubber in carbon disulphide, chloroform or other solvent is applied. This process is used for mackintoshes and bathing caps and is also applied to thread.

In the fourth process, employed in the manufacture of book bindings and Willesden canvas, cotton cloth is run through a solution of oxide of copper in ammonia, which dissolves the superficial layer and, on evaporation, leaves it in the form of a uniform coating of cellulose. The process is completed by passing the cloth between rollers. There are still other processes, but these are the most important.

CONGENIAL WORK

And Strength to Perform It.

A person in good health is likely to have a genial disposition, ambition, and enjoy work.

On the other hand, if the digestive organs have been upset by wrong food, work becomes drudgery.

"Until recently," writes a Washington girl, "I was a railroad stenographer, which means full work every day.

"Like many other girls alone in a large city, I lived at a boarding house. For breakfast it was mush, greasy meat, soggy cakes, black coffee, etc.

"After a few months of this diet I used to feel sleepy and heavy in the mornings. My work seemed a terrible effort, and I thought the work was to blame—too arduous.

"At home I had heard my father speak of a young fellow who went long distances in the cold on Grape-Nuts and cream and nothing more for breakfast.

"I concluded if it would tide him over a morning's heavy work, it might help me, so on my way home one night I bought a package and next morning I had Grape-Nuts and milk for breakfast.

"I stuck to Grape-Nuts, and in less than two weeks I noticed improvement. I can't just tell how well I felt, but I remember I used to walk the 12 blocks to business and knew how good it was simply to live.

"As to my work—well, did you ever feel the delight of having congenial work and the strength to perform it? That's how I felt. I truly believe there's life and vigor in every grain of Grape-Nuts."

CURE

THE FACE I REMEMBERED

By ROBERT CARLTON BROWN.

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Another auto burglary," I mused to myself as I unfolded the noon edition of a New York paper.

I had entered the subway at Ninety-sixth street and, having plenty of time, had taken a local train.

Picking out a double seat facing forward I spread the paper out on my knee and began reading about the theft of another auto. For the past month the police had been trying to solve a series of clever automobile thefts, but no clew had been obtained.

I read this latest case with interest. It was so much the same as the others that I could almost tell what would come next, but nevertheless, it held my attention. Possibly because I own an auto, and possibly for one other reason that I do not care to disclose, as yet.

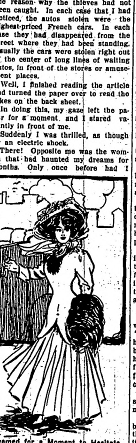
Their plan of operation was simple, evidently, and that, doubtless, was the reason why the thieves had not been caught. In each case that I had noticed, the autos stolen were the highest-priced French cars. In each case they had disappeared from the street where they had been standing. Usually the cars were stolen right out of the center of long lines of waiting autos, in front of the stores or amusement places.

Well, I finished reading the article and turned the paper over to read the jokes on the back sheet.

In doing this, my gaze left the paper for a moment, and I stared vacantly in front of me.

Suddenly I was thrilled, as though by an electric shock.

There! Opposite me was the woman that had haunted my dreams for months. Only once before had I drunk in her beauty, but I remembered that occasion vividly, and I still held her every feature in my memory.



Seemed for a Moment to Hesitate.

Catching myself, I jerked up my arm and held the newspaper in front of my face that she might not think me impudent in staring at her charms. It was, however, with great difficulty that I composed myself and quieted my mind.

Although I had seen her real self but once, I had gazed at her photograph hundreds of times. Then the remembrance of her portrait held me. It had not done her justice. It lacked the life, the fire—that made her what she was to me. Surely, the photo was a gross injustice; yet that picture was even stronger on my mind than the reality—through association.

Suddenly I was sensible of a swish of skirts and realized that the lady of my dreams was passing out.

I would not let her escape me. Now that I had found her again I could not bear to lose her so soon.

In a second I was on my feet. Possibly I would never see her again. That could not be. I must follow her.

She swept through the exit and climbed to the street. I followed, far enough behind so that if she turned she would not know that I was dogging her steps, as probably countless callow youths had done before me.

At the corner drug store she fluttered in.

From the opposite corner I watched her. She looked around the store, and then I saw her step over to a man waiting on a bench. At her touch he rose and shook himself, as though he had been dozing while waiting for her. I noted that he was a chauffeur. He had on the regulation leather cap and I saw his goggles protruding from an upper pocket.

She spoke to him and he immediately went out to the street. There he entered a large touring car in which was seated another driver. The man who was already in the car was a short, dark fellow, the regular type of rough mechanic, while the one who had come from the store was much younger and had light sandy hair.

While the two drivers waited in the car I noticed that the lady made a few purchases at the druggists' and then stepped out and into the auto.

Almost before I knew she was whizzed away.

Standing there with a blank expression on my face, I thought that I would have to give up following her. Then a taxicab dragged past, and with sudden inspiration I hailed it and instructed the mechanician to follow the large touring car.

Through several busy blocks we kept track of the machine ahead, and then suddenly it came to a stop in front of a hotel. Five or six autos were in line there and we drew up behind the car in which my lady sat.

As soon as they came to a stop she got out and went into the hotel. I told my man to wait, for I thought she would return to her car soon.

But, a few minutes after she had gone into the hotel, the lady's machine started off, with both drivers on the front seat.

I couldn't understand this move, and I sat puzzled as to which course to pursue, for I wanted to find out more about her. Finally, I decided that it would be better to follow the auto and get my information from the chauffeur instead of going into the hotel and inquiring about her.

By the time I had made up my mind and given the order to the driver the other machine was a block away.

We shortened the distance, however, and were only half a block behind when they came to a sudden stop near a large dry goods store.

There they stayed but a moment while the stout dark driver jumped out and started slowly up the street.

Then the machine pulled on past the long row of autos waiting in front of the store. I was undecided whether to follow the fair young man in the machine or get out and catch up with the darker man.

Hurriedly making up my mind, I ordered my driver to wait and I started off slowly after the man, who had gotten out of the auto we had been following.

He walked around the block and I strolled along behind him, trying to get up nerve enough to talk to him.

Then he stopped at the corner and began walking slowly along the line of waiting autos. His interest in the machines was rather an idle one and a glance was all that he bestowed on most of them.

Suddenly, however, he paused in front of a big French car. It was by far the best in the lot and I admired his chauffeurian sense. It was very good taste; the machine was elegantly fitted out, and there was no one in it. It was about in the middle of the row, and I paused when he did. With sudden interest in the empty machine, he peered over the side at the mechanism in front. I drew close to him to get my information and stood for a moment while he fumbled in his pocket for something.

I started back in surprise, for we had left her at the hotel, and I could not account for her sudden appearance here.

Quite evidently she was in a hurry, but as I stepped back she threw a quick glance at me, seemed for a moment to hesitate, as though remembering my face, and then brushed past me and entered the car.

With a gesture that surprised me by its quickness, the dark mechanician that I had been following pulled a fumbling hand from his pocket, and in it was a spark plug. Quickly fitting it into the machine he jumped around to the crank.

It was the work of a second.

I smiled with satisfaction. I flushed with victory.

Stepping up to the car I doffed my hat to the lady whose face I remembered and addressed her. Before I had opened my lips she shrank to the further side of the seat and dropped a fair hand, holding a handkerchief, over the outside door.

"Just a moment, Mrs. Le Mont," I smiled. "You will pardon me, but I must arrest you."

At the words she flung her head back and glared at me defiantly, as though she were going to try to bluff it out and make me think I had been mistaken in her face. But, no, I knew it too well to be bothered with any uncertainty.

"I happen to know of your connection with this puzzling series of automobile thefts," I continued quickly. "I have followed you and learned how you worked your game. It is very pretty. I don't remember having seen anything so bold for some time."

"Pardon me, I think you must be mistaken. I don't know who you are—" she broke in.

I cut her off with: "Possibly not. But I remember your picture in the rogues' gallery distinctly. Also I happen to know who this machine that you were about to go away in belongs to. You will pardon my—"

I paused for breath and to choose a delicate phrase.

Her face had gone white, the hand in which she held the tiny handkerchief fluttered nervously over the other side of the machine, and suddenly she drew it in to clench tightly about the door handle. An agony was expressed in the nervous twitching of of that hand and the hasty, anxious glances she gave behind her. I hated to go on.

But before I could continue, a whirr of levers and wheels confused me. Somebody jostled hard against me.

Losing my balance, I grabbed for support, and as I endeavored to right myself, I saw the dark chauffeur, who had given me the shove that unbalanced me, help my fair prisoner as she leaped from the car I was standing against into the one that was flying past at high speed.

In the car that she had leaped into I saw the face of the younger chauffeur, whom she had met in the drug store. Evidently he had been waiting in the row behind for just such a mishap, and had come to her aid when he saw the signal of her handkerchief fluttering over the outer door.

The dark driver had disappeared when I looked around.

Jumping to the front seat of the car by which I stood I found that he had forgotten to remove the spark plug. The engine he had already started and it was the work of a second for me to throw on speed and start in pursuit of the speeding auto.

It was a short chase. I followed closely and kept my gun ready for action. They turned into a drive beside an elegant apartment and when I reached the rear I found that they had already entered the automobile elevator at the rear of the building. Then I knew how they had spirited away the stolen cars so successfully.

In ten minutes I had a squad of police around the house, we went in and found them on the top floor, with the latest stolen auto still stored in the aerial shed behind until its new coat of paint could dry and it could be taken to market again.

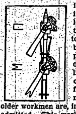
As I flashed my detective star on her I felt rather sorry that I had to do it. She had fine eyes.

It was rather a shame, after all. I almost wished that she had gotten away. It was a great face—one that no ordinary jail photographer could

TRAINING THE BOYS

HOW RAILROAD APPRENTICES ARE TUTORED.

Idea Is to Secure Sufficient Supply of Trained Employes to Do the Necessary Work of Roads.



Owing to the lack of skilled mechanics the education of apprentices is one of the most important problems with which the railroads have to deal. A number of the companies have accordingly established systematic courses of study for their young men to which the older workmen are, in some cases, also admitted. This work has now passed the experimental stage. In the night schools attendance by apprentices is compulsory. A regular three-year course is mapped out, including arithmetic, elementary mechanics and mechanical drawing. The Omaha public library has established a special branch at the shops, containing books on mechanics and engineering, to which the men have free access. The boys take great interest in their work and advance rapidly. As soon as they finish the course and are properly qualified they are put at more responsible work. This school proved so successful that another has been opened by the company in its shops at Cheyenne.

A similar apprentices' night school is maintained by the Oregon Short Line at Sparks, Nev., under supervision of a professor from the State university. A feature of this school is the time credits allowed to the boys for punctual attendance and proper interest. This credit amounts to 30 days for each year, and is applied on their apprenticeship. For instance, an apprentice having taken four years' tuition and having received a credit of 30 days for each year, can complete a four years' apprenticeship in three years and eight months, receiving his rating as journeyman four months earlier than otherwise. In its transportation department the Oregon Short Line trains young men as brakemen under the care of experienced crews. The students are drilled in the methods of handling trains and are required to study the rules and regulations of the operating department. Their progress is carefully watched, and when proficient they are recommended to the trainmaster, by whom they are thoroughly examined before qualifying as regular brakemen. Although the service of these young men are not of much value while they are learning the business, the company pays them sufficient wages to support them during their apprenticeship.

The expenditures by the companies for the education of their apprentices is fully warranted in their estimation by the more efficient work they will get, the saving of time and material due to higher proficiency and the assurance that on completion of his course of study the apprentice will be a competent mechanic.—From "Welfare Work on American Railroads," by William Menkel, in the American Review of Reviews.

The Strange Psychology of Fear.

For instance, there was Conductor George D. Porter of the Jersey Central, who went rushing across tracks and platform at the Jersey City station with dinner pail, lantern, cap and little red tin dickey box in his hands in great haste one summer day. The footboard of a switch engine which crept up behind unheard because of the din in the station struck him in the legs. Through some strange interposition of Providence, instead of throwing him down to be ground under the wheels, it either threw him, or by some strange reflex action too swift for the memory to record, caused him to leap on the platform, where he sprawled unhurt, though the contents of his dinner pail were scattered over the dirty platform.

Upon scrambling to his feet, Conductor Porter and the engineer nearly came to blows; and the quarrel was based wholly upon the loss of the lunch!—Exchange.

Good Work of Engineers.

By the presence of mind of the respective engine drivers what threatened to be a terrible railway collision at Barnetby, near Grimsby, one night recently was reduced to a comparatively trivial mishap. A light engine had been allowed to get on to the main line in front of the Great Central Continental boat express for Grimsby through a signalman's error. The driver of the express seeing a collision was inevitable applied his brake, while the driver of the light engine increased his speed in an endeavor to keep ahead. The trains, however, met and both sets of buffers were smashed, but strange to say not a single passenger was injured.—London Mail.

England's Fast Trains.

The Great Western railroad, England, is famous for its express trains. During the season of transatlantic travel, there are three expresses which run daily from London to Exeter, a distance of 173 2-3 miles, without a stop, in three hours, at an average speed of just under 58 miles an hour. A fourth express makes the same run at an average speed of 56 1-3 miles an hour. It is not unusual for the total load back of the tender and expresses to reach 400 tons.

When to Bow and Shake Hands.

In one's house, for instance, it is correct to shake hands with every one, and from this rule there is no deviation. In other people's houses it is by no means necessary to shake hand on the occasion of a casual introduction; in fact it would look ignorant to do more than to bow. It is always considered good form to serve golden grain belt beer at mealtime. This mild, delicious beverage is as good for health as it is to the taste and keen appetite comes with its use. Scenting a Tragedy.

Fully half a man's time is taken up listening to poor jokes. At noon we usually eat a luncheon downtown at a restaurant, and every day we hear the joke about the only good thing on the table being the salt. Every day some man works over this joke, thinking it is new in Atchison and funny. We often notice the countenances of the waiters when the joke is sprung; we have an idea that some of these days one of them will grab up a bread knife and use it on the joker. If we happen to be present we propose to testify that the joker attacked the waiter first.—Atchison Globe.

Silenced Him.

A shrewd looking individual stood in front of a jeweler's window in Regent street, gazing at a peculiar sort of clock. The affable shopman was standing in the doorway.

"That's a funny clock," said the man. "What do you call it?"

"A spring lever chronometer," was the reply, "and it will run for four hundred days without winding."

"A very long time!" exclaimed the man. Then he said quizzically: "I say, how long do you suppose it would go if you were to wind it?"—Illustrated Bits.

THE MILLS OF JUSTICE

March General Term of the District Court Convened Monday---Several Cases Disposed of---Will be in Session Several Days More

Death of Frederick Schultz

Frederick Schultz, son of Mrs. Herman Lindner, died early last Friday morning. Death was due to intestinal trouble after an illness lasting only a few days. Frederick was a bright little boy and his death came as a shock to his relatives since he had enjoyed good health until less than a week before his death. Funeral services were held from the home Sunday afternoon, Rev. Philip A. Schwarz, jr., officiating. Deceased was fourteen years old and is survived by three sisters and four brothers besides his mother and stepfather.

BEST OF THE COURSE

Toronto Male Quartet Gave an Excellant Concert Last Friday Evening

What is pronounced the best number of the entertainment course by all who were there was the concert given by the Toronto male quartet Friday evening. The program was varied and entertaining and the music was of a quality highly pleasing to Red Lake Falls people and Red Lake Falls people have the reputation of being a little "spoiled" on the music question.

The work of Mr. Gardner, the reader, gave a pleasing variety to the evenings entertainment.

The fellows from Canada were told that they were wanted here again next year and the spokesman for the quartet said they wanted to come and that they were so pleased with their reception that they were going to tell their friends that though the name of Red Lake Falls may not be printed on the map in very big letters, it is the biggest, if not the largest, town in the state of Minnesota.

Hearing on Ditch Petition.

The hearing on the petition of A. C. Mayfield and others for the establishment of a county ditch, proposed county ditch No. 32, will be held at the county auditor's office April 9. There is considerable opposition to the establishment of the ditch and the meeting will no doubt be an interesting one.

The March general term of district court for the Fourteenth judicial district, Watts, J., presiding, convened Monday. There is considerable work to be done and court will be in session all of this week and probably a greater part of next week.

There was little work for the grand jury to do.

The grand jury made the following report to the court:

Fourteenth Judicial District
Red Lake County, Minn.

To the Honorable William Watts, Judge of the above named Court:

The grand jury of the March general term desire to make the following recommendation:

We recommend that the county commissioners order the crack in the jail cemented and a new cement sidewalk in front of the jail.

We find everything satisfactory in regard to treatment and handling of prisoners.

R. H. Green, Foreman.
A. D. Berry, Clerk.

OUT ON BAIL.

Dr. Gronerud, Charged With Abortion, Was Released.

Dr. August Gronerud, who has been confined in the county jail all winter, was arraigned in court Monday, charged with abortion. He was released upon $1,000 bond to appear for trial upon order of the court. It has been stated that the defendant and the girl upon whom he is alleged to have performed the criminal operation are to be married and if that event transpires it is doubtful if the case will ever come to trial.

Other cases.

Edwin Detert, charged with petit larceny, was arraigned Monday. He plead guilty to the charge and was sentenced to twenty days in the county jail.

The case of M. E. Mathews vs. J. E. O'Brien resulted in a verdict of $247 for the plaintiff. The suit was to recover for attorney's fees, the plaintiff claiming a fee which with interest amounted to about $418.

In the case of Sweans vs. Evenson plaintiff made motion for a charge of venue. The motion was denied and the case was set for Friday.

The case of City of Thief River Falls vs. Val Yaeger went to the jury this morning. The jury having disagreed, the case is being tried again this afternoon. This case is an appeal from a judgment of the municipal court at Thief River Falls. Yaeger was fined $100 and costs by the municipal court for selling liquor unlawfully.

BAND BOYS MADE FINE SHOWING

Concert Given Tuesday Evening Delighted a Large Number

Kids Can Play Some Too—Prof. Ecklund Has Done Good Work

The concert given Tuesday evening by the Red Lake Falls Concert band was a delightful one and the people of the city are prouder of their band than ever—if that is possible. The music played was of a grade not often attempted by bands other than professional oragnizations, but it was handled in almost faultless manner.

The junior band played a selection and the kids received a vigorous encore. Talk about your kid bands! With such material as that to recruit from, the Red Lake Falls band is not going to lose its reputation right away.

Jos. Harren played a baritone solo so well that he was compelled to respond to an encore and after Messrs. Garceau and Freund had played their cornet duet there was a noise like more music but the boys wouldn't respond.

No one doubts that Red Lake Falls people are to enjoy some good music next summer. Prof. Ecklund has done his work well.

The Difference.

What is the difference between high grade and low grade baking powder?

All baking powders are white and are sold in round cans with bright labels. They look alike, but in contents they are very different.

High grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tarter derived from grapes. They are healthful and economical to use.

Low grade baking powders are made of alum an stringent mineral acid.

Before the Pure Food Law only a chemist could tell by analysis one from the other.

But now the baking powders have the ingredients printed on the back of the label. By reading the label, the housekeeper knows the ingredients and being careful of the welfare of her household, avoids the alum kind of baking powder.

Good baking powder is one of the most useful things in the kitchen—and there is a difference.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE

IMPORTANT TRANSACTIONS OF THE LAWMAKERS DURING THE PAST WEEK.

St. Paul, March 11.—Cass Lake won out in the senate yesterday in the battle for the location of the new normal school, but not until sergeants-at-arms had scoured St. Paul in search of three absent senators and business had been suspend for two hours. On a motion to accept the report of the committee of the whole favoring the passage of the amended bill leaving the location of the normal school to the state normal school board the supporters of the Cass Lake project asked for a call of the senate. Business was suspended while a hunt was made for absent senators. At 12 o'clock a roll call was taken showing a vote of 35 to 24 against the acceptance of the committee report. By a vote of 35 to 25 the original bill establishing the school at Cass Lake was placed on the calendar for passage.

In the House.

The Bjorge tonnage tax bill has been made a special order in the house for Wednesday. The Stuart employers' liability bill was made a special order for Thursday of next week.

The Zelch automobile bill, which provides for a license to be secured from the secretary of state, also a license for the chauffeur to be secured the same way, was passed by the house. The bill limits the speed to twenty miles an hour.

St. Paul, March 12.—There is little likelihood that the primary election law will be changed at this session. The senate yesterday in turn defeated the Moonan bill for state-wide primary, the Sullivan amendment to the Canfield bill leaving the system as it is except for a primary system for the selection of delegates to the state convention, and, lastly, killed the Canfield bill itself, which abolishes the primary system except for the election of delegates to the state conventions. The senate spent the entire afternoon on the two bills and the debate was at times spirited.

A bill which it was said would legalize the formation of trusts in Minnesota was killed in the senate by a vote of 7 to 36. The bill related to the power of corporations, permitting the issuance of more than one class of stock.

A bill by Senator Cashman prohibits the publication of accounts of the proceedings in juvenile courts.

The committee on public accounts and expenditures recommended the repeal of the constitutional section providing for the publication of the annual report of the state treasurer.

Senator Sullivan introduced a bill creating a commission to inquire into the operation of indeterminate sentence laws in other states.

A bill extending the power of the state board of health to include supervision and regulation of buildings and utensils used in producing food products for sale was introduced in the senate.

Senator Hanson offered a bill appropriating $25,000 for a hospital at the agricultural school.

In the House.

Three bills for drainage work by the state were killed in the house yesterday. The Spooner bill giving authority to the state drainage commission to open, widen and straighten streams not under federal control, the Mackenzie bill appropriating $15,000 and the Spooner bill appropriating $50,000 for widening the Chippewa river, were the bills tabled.

Representative Kneeland's bill for a convention to revise the constitution failed of passage in the house because such a measure would require eighty votes and the bill received only sixty-two.

The bill for a state drug law similar to the national law was recommended for passage in committee of the whole.

St. Paul, March 13.—The house, in committee of the whole, yesterday voted favorably on the bill placing street railways under the state railroad and warehouse commission. The debate on the bill was exciting for a time and charges and counter charges were plentiful.

The bill allowing social clubs to sell liquor without a license was recommended for passage in committee of the whole.

The house passed Senator Alderman's bill limiting saloons to one for each 500 inhabitants.

The bill authorizing domestic insurance companies to invest their funds in bonds or securities of such foreign states in which they transact business was passed.

Under a bill introduced by Representative Graham any county may, with the consent of the board of control, establish an asylum for the chronic insane. The state is to pay the county $3 a week for each patient they care for.

A bill requiring surety companies to file schedules of their rates with the insurance commissioner, together with all terms, credits, commissions and allowances, was offered by Representative Spooner.

Among the bills passed were: Permitting cities of 20,000 to 50,000 to spend money for open-air concerts; providing contingent fund to pay discharged state employes; empowering cities to construct municipal waterworks, reservoirs, dams, light and power plants, or to acquire by purchase or condemnation such waterworks, etc.; to prevent the manufacture and sale of adulterated or misbranded drugs.

The selling of malt drinks, whether intoxicating or not, in any other place than a saloon, is prohibited in a bill handed in by Representative Haugland.

In the Senate.

Under suspension of the rules the senate yesterday passed a bill which will have the effect of retaining S. W. Leavett on the board of control. The bill was rushed through at a speed which inspired Senator Works to characterize it as the rankest attempt to railroad legislation seen this session. The bill amends the law giving old soldiers the preference for all state jobs. It amends the law so that old soldiers when once they get a position under the state cannot be removed except on written charges filed by the appointing power and reviewed by a board consisting of the governor, lieutenant governor and attorney general. Every holder of a hunting license will have to supply the state fish and game commission with a list of the deer and caribou killed by him during the season, under a bill passed by the senate yesterday.

Among the bills passed were: Making time for canvassing board meeting third Tuesday in November; regulating width and strength of bridges; permitting county commissioners to improve roads through villages in certain cases.

St. Paul, March 15.—The senate Saturday advanced to the calendar the bill appropriating $250,000 for the completion of work in connection with the state capitol approaches. The bill, however, will have to go to the joint committee on appropriaions.

The senate in committee of the whole recommended for passage the house bill raising the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen years.

The three bills for the establishment of a land commission will be considered by the senate on a special order Thursday afternoon.

Bills introduced were: Amending the law relating to the reports of public libraries; providing for issue of permits for prospecting for ore on state lands and for mining leases; authorizing cities of the fourth class to levy frontage tax for waterworks.

St. Paul, March 16.—The members of the legislature spent yesterday afternoon inspecting the proposed site of the Armour packing plant, near the University of Minnesota, and on the northeastern city limits of Minneapolis. It was pointed out by the St. Paul members that the site was not in New Brighton, as was generally supposed, but four miles nearer the university than the village of New Brighton. It was declared that no opposition would be offered on the part of the citizens of St. Paul if the plant was to be located in the village of New Brighton proper.

The midnight lid bill was killed again in the house yesterday. On a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was killed last week the vote was overwhelming against reconsideration. The vote was 73 to 30.

Bills introduced were: Providing state aid for school libraries; decreasing tax on mortgages to 10 cents on $100; to create and maintain a division of agricultural extension and home education in the department of agriculture of the University of Minnesota; relating to local option for limited license to sell intoxicating liquors in towns of the fourth class; amending section 4 of section 784, Laws of 1905, which authorizes school districts to issue bonds for certain purposes; to prevent deception in the sale of paris green and other insecticides; to regulate the business of real estate and commission brokers; relating to reports of public libraries; to provide for the nomination of candidates for state offices by primary election; to permit the voters of the state to express their opinion as to whether or not the primary election laws shall be extended to include all state officers; to pension citizen soldiers who participated in the Indian massacre of 1862; providing for the inspection of canneries, publishing reports of same and establishing a grade for canned fruits and vegetables.

In the Senate.

Senator Works yesterday denounced the Republicans for "railroading through" the Peterson bill, the measure which would enable old soldiers to retain office under the state and prevent their removal except on charges. Senator Works declared the bill was simply an attempt to force the reappointment of S. W. Leavitt and that it was forced through under suspension of the rules, which after a lively debate was referred to the committee on rules by a vote of 26 to 15.

The senate reconsidered its action in defeating the Brady bill, a bill permitting members of the legislature to draw their full pay at the end of the session instead of waiting until the expiration of their terms. The bill was placed on general orders.

VILLAGE TO BE OBLITERATED.

Sparta (Minn.,) Business Houses and Residents Moving to Gilbert.

Duluth, March 14.—The site of the village of Sparta will soon be an open pit mine. The residents of the town have been given notice by the United States Steel corporation to move, and the property will be stripped in the near future. Most of the business men of Sparta have already moved to the town of Gilbert.

GOOD WINTER FOR LOGGING.

Shipments From Couderay, Wis., Average Nearly 500,000 Feet Daily.

Couderay, Wis., March 14.—The winter has been ideal for logging operations. With very little snow and just cold enough for good ice roads, the conditions have been prime, and more logs have been shipped out of this section the last two months than ever before. The shipments average nearly 500,000 feet a day, all going to the mills at Eau Claire and Rice Lake.

FIREBUG AT WORK AT HUDSON.

Kerosene Used in Destruction of South Dakota Elevator.

Hudson, S. D., March 14—Destroying 5,000 bushels of corn and oats, the second incendiary fire which Hudson has suffered in recent months consumed the Reliance elevator. The smell of kerosene was plainly discernible when the blaze started and no other cause can be assigned than that some firebug is at work.

Peanuts in India.

The cultivation of American peanuts, which was introduced into the Kolhapur states some years ago by one of the American medical missionaries, has become so popular that they have now become almost the chief crop. Unfortunately the people persist in eating them raw as they formerly at the little country nuts, and as the American nuts are much richer acute indigestion troubles and liver inflammation are the frequent result.

Doing Fine.

Lionel and Virginia had enjoyed together the first week of school life. A friend, meeting the little fellow, said to him, "Well, little man, I hear you are going to school now; how are you getting along?"

The boy looked up smiling and answered with an air of proud achievement, "Well, I kissed Berginga" (Virginia).

The Week in the State

$157,348,856 TO BUILD ROAD.

This Total Applies Only to the Mileage in Minnesota.

To reproduce the Great Northern railway system in Minnesota within an interval of eight years would mean an expenditure to the company of $157,343,856, according to figures presented at the opening of the Great Northern rate hearing in St. Paul by A. H. Hogeland, chief engineer of the Great Northern.

The case was called before Master in Chancery Charles E. Otis in the federal building, with a noted array of specialists on hand to guide it through the legal shoals while being brought to the same point at which the Northern Pacific and Minneapolis & St. Louis case was adjourned last week.

For the Great Northern the chief counsel is Hale Holden of Chicago and Robert Thorne of New York, with Jared How and Pierce Butler, attorneys for the Northern Pacific, as associates. The state railroad and warehouse commission is represented by former Attorney General E. T. Young and T. D. O'Brien.

Mr. Hogeland presented a lengthy statement of the values of the road up to June 30, 1908, and his estimates of the cost of reproduction. His valuation of $157,348,856 is about twice as high as the value of the road as compiled by Dwight P. Morgan for the commission.

The statement included every action necessary in building a new railroad, value of sites, grading, bridges and the remainder. The work of building the terminals at St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth would be in progress during the entire eight years of reconstruction, certain parts of the road being built each year.

Mr. Hogeland gives the mileage of the main line in Minnesota as 2,056.07 miles, and the total mileage in the state at 2,779.30 miles.

Attorneys in the hearing state that but a short time will be taken up in bringing the Great Northern case to the point of the other cases, where the evidence will be in common to all concerned.

LID IS REMOVABLE.

Cities May Submit License Question to Voters.

Villages, towns and cities may vote on the license question, according to Assistant Attorney General Weeks. Several towns throughout the state are in a quandary as to what to do on this question. Fergus Falls has voted on it many times in years past and has once gone dry, but later relented. A new charter was adopted and the provision for voting on the question was omitted. When this was discovered the anti-saloon people feared they would not be allowed to put the question to a vote again.

The anti-license people, who have been looking into the law, find that section 1528 of the General Statutes gives all "towns and villages" the right to vote on the question upon petition of ten voters, and that section 5514 provides that "the word 'town' may include cities, villages, boroughs or districts, unless such construction would be repugnant to the provisions of any act relating thereto." The anti-license people claim that this gives them the right to vote and have petitioned the city clerk for the submission of the license question to a vote. It has been reported that the attorney general's office is inclined to the opinion that cities have the right to vote under its provisions. The city attorney of Fergus Falls is said to have written the attorney general to find out if this is the case, and if so he will recommend that the question be submitted. There are several cities in the state, the charters of which fail to provide for a vote on the license question.

In the absence of Attorney General George T. Simpson Mr. Weeks said that he did not know of any communication from the city attorney of Fergus Falls, but it was his opinion the people could vote on the question if the city clerk was properly petitioned by ten legal voters.

TWENTY YEARS A BISHOP.

Cotter of Winona Will Soon Mark an Important Anniversary.

Rt. Rev. Bishop Joseph B. Cotter is completing his twentieth year of service as the first bishop of the Winona diocese. The following statistics just issued are of interest:

Number of priests in Winona diocese, 92; number of parishes attended to, 124; Catholic population in diocese, 49,215.

There are two academies for the higher education of young ladies, one in Winona and the other in Owatonna, with a total membership of 185.

In twenty-eight parishes of the diocese are maintained parochial schools, accommodating in all 4,630.

ARREST MEN WHO BURN HALLS.

State Fire Marshal Peterson is prosecuting the gang of men who are charged with operating for the past five years in the northern part of the state, setting fires to disreputable dance halls and collecting big insurance from the insurance companies.

Warrants for the arrest of Joe Kenville of Killiger, Ella Taylor of Ranier and Jack Woods, who are charged with burning a building at Ranier, were issued last week and the party is now in jail at Bemidji.

TIE UP IMMIGRANTS.

New Settlers Are Annoyed by Cattle Inspection.

Minnesota is likely to suffer to a large extent in the matter of immigration, owing to the scarcity of federal inspectors at the Minnesota Transfer, at St. Paul, who inspect the cattle immigrants bring with them into the state. There is also a decided lack of information regarding the inspection laws on the part of the prospective settlers in Minnesota.

Immigrants come to this state from all parts of the Union, and when they learn that the time consumed at the transfer for the inspection of cattle is about two days they become wrathy and send letters of crit'cism and censure to the state immigration commission, it is claimed. They believe the immigration board is responsible for the delay, whereas the bureau has nothing to do with it. The live stock sanitary board is also blamed, as the people believe that the inspection is a state matter, when, as a matter of fact, it is wholly a federal concern.

At present there are three inspectors at the transfer. Dr. Harrison is in charge, and he denies that there is any delay in the inspection of cattle. He says that it does not take longer than one day for the inspection, but that tthere may be delays caused by the railroads. He says that immigrants could have their cattle pass through without any examination, provided they bring a certificate from a proper veterinarian of the state from which they come. This the immigrants do not know.

Immigrant, land and development companies have written to the state immigration commission, stating that no more cattle would be brought into the state through their agencies. if the delay continues. The commission is sending out the information to the companies and immigrants that it is a federal matter and that a proper certificate would bring the cattle into the state without inspection. But if the number of inspectors is to be increased that will have to be taken up with the national government.

FALSE WEIGHT LOSS HEAVY.

State Treasurer Recommends Introduction of Bill Providing for Proper Inspection.

While it is not known how much the consumer in Minnesota loses because of untested or incorrect weights and measures, it may be said that the amount is large, judging from the statistics of New York, where the purchaser loses $3,000,000," said C. C. Dinehart, state treasurer.

Mr. Dinehart will recommend the introduction of a bill providing for the inspection of weights and measures. The national conference on weights and measures is endeavoring to secure a uniform law throughout the United States by the appointment of a state commissioner, who will have charge of the work of the department, and who will file a report with the governor, which is to be sent to the national bureau of standards in the department of commerce and labor.

Representative Rosenwald will introduce a bill providing for a corps of inspectors under the state treasurer, who will be the keeper of the standard weights and measures, and who will send to the county treasurers the correct standards, sealed by him.

The inspectors of the dairy and food department may be used as inspectors of weights.

FARM SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

Exercises Will Begin March 20 and Last Four Days.

The twentieth annual commencement exercises of the school of agriculture of the University of Minnesota will begin March 20 and last four days.

The exercises will be held at the university farm and commence Saturday evening, March 20, with class exercises in the auditorium of the school at 8 p. m. Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock Rev. A. T. Fowler will preach the commencement sermon in the auditorium.

The class play will be held Monday evening at 8 o'clock, and Tuesday will be alumni day, with class reunions. The alumni dinner will be held in the dining hall of the farm at 6 p. m.

James J. Hill will deliver the address of the graduating exercises Wednesday afternoon in the auditorium. The affair will close with the alumni ball Wednesday evening.

RAILROADS EARN LESS.

Gross earnings of the railroads of Minnesota show a falling off of $11,013,000 in 1908, compared with the previous year.

This means that the state suffers a loss of revenue of $440,520. Returns from the thirty-six roads of the state are now in the hands of the state railroad and warehouse commission.

The complete totals are as follows: Gross earnings of roads for 1907, $88,888,946; taxes 1907, $3,555,557.84; gross earnings for 1908, $77,875,938.29; taxes for 1908, $3,115,037.46.

VACCINATION AGAINST TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE

Outfit for the Application of Bovovaccine.

In combating tuberculosis of domesticated animals, two methods are open for consideration:

1. Destruction of the casual organism, the tubercle bacillus, by eliminating the already diseased animals and disinfecting the infected premises.

2. Possible methods of producing immunity in susceptible animals by rendering them resistant to the tubercle organism.

The first method is easily attainable by the detection of the presence of the disease by means of the tuberculin test and the subsequent separation of affected animals. In this way the continued spread of this scourge can be entirely prevented. As no known method of cure exists for the disease in cattle, animals once infected must be isolated from healthy stock to prevent further spread of contagion. To remove all further danger from the disease, thorough disinfection of the quarters occupied by the tuberculous animals is imperative.

With certain other diseases, methods of vaccination have already been perfected, the efficiency of which is so great as to practically control such maladies. Diphtheria antitoxin, vaccination against smallpox, the Pasteur treatment for rabies and anthrax are potent illustrations of the efficiency of immunizing the bodies of susceptible hosts against the ravages of these human and animal plagues.

Numerous attempts have been made by scientific investigation to devise systems of vaccination against tuberculosis that will render susceptible animals resistant to invasion. Within recent years several investigators have announced various methods for this purpose.

In 1902, Von Behring, the prominent German bacteriologist, announced the discovery of a substance called bovovaccine with which he claimed calves could be immunized against natural infection from tuberculosis. Coming from the discoverer of diphtheria antitoxin, which remedy so revolutionized the methods of handling this disease of childhood, bovovaccine was hailed with high hopes. Von Behring's experiments, then reported, seemed to indicate that a successful method of rendering cattle resistant had at last been found. In a series of lectures given in Cassel in 1903, he made the following sweeping statement: "The entire suppression of bovine tuberculosis is now only a question of conscientious and properly conducted protective inoculations, and, of course, also a matter of time."

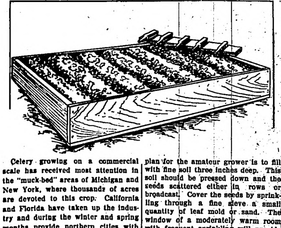
A year later he published a brief preliminary report of the results he had obtained to that date. These were extremely favorable, and were, on the whole, apparently substantiated by reports from other investigators. By means of his method of vaccination, he was able to raise perfectly healthy animals even when the latter were continually exposed to a tuberculous environment. The true efficiency of the vaccine could not be determined at the time, for the animals had not attained maturity, so that the duration of the immunity caused by the vaccine could not be ascertained. Nevertheless the results secured were exceedingly promising.

The principle involved in the production of bovovaccine is radically different from that used in the preparation of tuberculin. Tuberculin is a germ-free extract of cultures of tubercle bacilli, while bovovaccine consists of a weakened culture of living tubercle bacilli of human origin. The human type is used because of its greater adaptability for vaccine purposes than the bovine type. The commercial product is specially prepared as follows: After a sufficiently weakened culture has been obtained, it is grown upon a suitable medium, then carefully dried so as not to destroy its activity, and finally pulverized. It is then accurately weighed out into containers and sealed.

Most reliable results are claimed for animals vaccinated as calves between three weeks and three months of age. Young stock up to two years of age may be treated, provided they are free from tuberculosis. Mature animals (two years or older), however, cannot be successfully treated. The vaccinating process consists of two injections made three months apart. The first and weaker vaccine contains one so-called immunizing unit, equivalent to .004 grams of dry tubercle bacilli; the second vaccine consists of five such units. For inoculation purposes the powder is thoroughly mixed in a sterile mortar with a sterile one per cent. common salt solution, of which two cubic centimeters are used for each immunizing unit.

After a thorough emulsion is made, the material is then ready for injecting into the animal. For this purpose the neck over the left jugular vein is shaved, washed with a disinfectant and the injection made directly into the vein. To do this the needle of the syringe is held almost parallel to the jugular vein, then with a quick downward movement forced through the wall of the latter.

For the Starting of Early Celery



Celery growing on a commercial scale has received most attention in the "muck-bed" areas of Michigan and New York, where thousands of acres are devoted to this crop. California and Florida have taken up the industry and during the winter and spring months provide northern cities with large amounts of celery. There is, however, no reason why local growers should not hold their own markets from June to January against the importations from the south.

To secure an early crop the best plan for the amateur grower is to fill with fine soil three inches deep. This soil should be pressed down and the seeds scattered either in rows or broadcast. Cover the seeds by sprinkling through a fine sieve a small quantity of leaf mold or sand. The window of a moderately warm room with frequent sprinkling will provide the conditions necessary for germinaton. When the seedings appear after two or three weeks turn the boxes daily to keep the growth even. The illustration shows the form of box used for starting the plants.

DIRECTIONS FOR MAKING YOUR OWN BROODER

Device Which Will Prove a Satisfactory Foster Mother for the Little Chicks.

The object is to get a warm, ventilated box in which chickens can be reared without a hen. Warmth is obtained by means of a lamp so placed that its fumes are not permitted to enter the chick compartment. Fresh air continually flows into the brooder and ventilates it. The box that forms the brooder is 34 inches square and 8 inches deep, inside measurement. It is made of 7-8-inch lumber planed on both sides. A 5x10-inch chick door should be sawed in one of the sides of the box; the chick door should be hinged at the top.

The floor is 7-8-inch matched lumber. At center of the floor a round hole (diameter 6¼ inches) should be sawed. The heater is placed in this opening and rests on a galvanized iron rim (inside diameter 5½ inches).

Four legs, 7x8x2 inches should be attached to the box; they should project 8½ inches below it.

The roof is a light wooden frame, covered on both sides with heavy cotton. It should fit inside the box level with the top, and be supported on half-inch cleats. The roof frame is 34 inches square and one inch deep, outside dimensions. There should be a 4-inch board across the middle of the frame. At the center of this board a 2-inch hole is required for the upper smoke pipe of the heater.

The run is 2x3 feet. It should be hinged to the front of the brooder on a level with the brooder floor. A three-section hinged frame six inches high should be placed around the outside of the run to confine the chicks for the first few days. The floor of the run can then be lowered to the ground and will form a runway into the brooder.

The heater is made of galvanized iron with the exception of the heat-reflector. This should be cut from bright tin. The dimensions of the different parts of the heater are as follows:

Lower smoke pipe diameter, 3 inches; length, 5½ inches.

Heating chamber—Diameter, 20 inches; depth, 2 inches. A heat-reflector (inverted cone), is placed in below the top of the heating chamber. the heating chamber. The diameter of the cone is 18 inches, depth 1¼ inch The apex of the cone is one-half inch above the bottom of the heating chamber by three chips at the top. The upper and lower surfaces of the heating chamber should be rigid; they can be stayed to the cone, or held by two wire nails driven through the chamber and soldered.

Upper smoke pipe—Diameter 1 inch; length, 4 inches. The upper smoke pipe should be soldered one-half inch inside the heating chamber.

To complete the heater two strips of flannel should be placed around the outside of the heating chamber and tied with a cord to it. The flannel strips should extend four inches below the heater. They reach to within one inch of the floor of the brooder, and form a warm hover for the chicks. The strips should be cut every four inches, and alternately, so as to prevent the escape of heat.

For the lamp the diameter of the oil fount, 7½ inches; depth, 2 inches; total height of lamp (including chimney) 8 inches. There should be a small handle on the oil fount, and a screw cap for filling with oil. A large size burner can be used, or a special water-cooled burner; the burner screws into an ordinary lamp collar soldered to the oil fount. The iron chimney is about five inches high; the diameter of the top chimney is 2½ inches; the bottom diameter is 3 inches. A 1½-inch hole should be punched in the chimney and covered inside with mica in order to see the flame. The top of the chimney is placed over the lower smoke pipe.

The fumes of the lamp enter the lower smoke pipe and ascend to the center of the lower part of the heating chamber. The heat-reflector compels their circulating to the outer edge of the heating chamber. They then ascend to the upper part of the chamber, flow back to the center of the heater and are carried off by the upper smoke pipe. Fuel is saved by this forced circulation of the lamp fumes; the hover is warmer at the outside than towards the center, so that crowding of the chicks is materially prevented.

Warmed fresh air is supplied to the hover by means of the fresh air chamber. Fresh air enters at the bottom of the chamber. It is warmed by contact with the hot smoke pipe, and flows into the hover below the heating chamber and above the heads of the chicks.

Skim-Milk Fed Calves.—So many people speak of the trouble of raising calves on skim milk. Now there is trouble in raising a calf by any method, if its mother is used for dairy purposes. To let a calf to the cow and take it away when it has enough is more work than feeding by hand. Further, there is no absolute way of telling when the calf has taken the proper amount of milk. You just have to guess at it. The calf that is fed by hand can be raised on skim milk after a few days, and the cream saved. The calf that takes its nourishment from the cow consumes all the cream in the milk, hence an expensive calf. The hand-fed calf will soon learn to eat grass, hay, or grain and will make as good growth, with care, as the calf fed in the natural way. It lives on cheap feed, is always contented, and through constant handling becomes a gentle and serviceable cow. Those who have tried the two methods find that the skim-milk method is safe, easy, and profitable in every way.

A Good Indication.—The cow with a deep udder, the forequarter of the udder well down away from the body, which udder, when milked out, is slack, deep, and pliable, and empty, may be looked upon as an excellent milker.

Point of Cheapness.—Cheapness in production is the first point to be mastered by the beginner. In his breeding he should work for large litters, early maturity and quality.

Year's Record Tells.—A cow must be kept the whole year, and whether or not she is a paying investment depends upon the receipts from her for the full time she is kept.

Put Manure on Garden.—Begin to prepare for next year's vegetables by fertilizing the garden and getting it ready to plow if it was not plowed this fall.

Wasted Advice.

"It's the little things that count. Don't be a grump. Compliment your wife on her new hat when you go home to-night."

A Campaign Year.

"Whither are we drifting?" demanded the grocery orator.

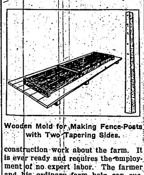
"Toward the codfish barrel," unexpectedly answered the proprietor. "But tain't no use, boys. That barrel was cleaned out durin' the debate last night."

TRY CEMENT FENCE POSTS ON THE FARM

Are Cheaper in the Long Run Because Once In They Are In to Stay.

The use of cement for the making of fence posts on the farm is becoming quite general. The material offers a very desirable substitute for timber, which is now so expensive and scarce. It has the advantage over wood in that it gives a post that is not only reasonable in cost but one that is everlasting, its strength increasing with age. There is no decay with cement, consequently no repairing or replacing. And in appearance the cement post is all that can be desired.

In cement the farmer has a material that he can use for fence posts and in unlimited number of ways in construction work about the farm. It is ever ready and requires the employment of no expert labor. The farmer and his ordinary farm help can successfully handle cement. Little experience is needed, as the following of a few simple directions is all that is necessary. The mixing is the important part. Proper proportions of cement, sand and gravel for the desired construction and thorough mixing will give good results.

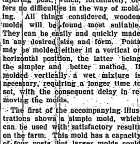


Wooden Mold for Making Fence-Posts with Two Tapering Sides.

In the making of fence posts the material should be about one part of cement, 2½ parts sand and five parts gravel. The mixing is best done on a platform of convenient size. The sand and gravel should first be placed on the mixing bed, well spread out, and on the top of this spread the cement. Then mix with shovels or hoes until the whole mass exhibits a uniform color. Next, form a crater of the dry mixture, and into this pour nearly the whole amount of water required for the batch. Thoroughly mix from the outside toward the center until all the water is taken up, adding more by sprinkling to give the desired consistency.

Economy points to the use of a tapering post, which, fortunately, offers no difficulties in the way of molding. All things considered, wooden molds will be found most suitable. They can be easily and quickly made in any desired size and form. Posts may be molded either in a vertical or horizontal position, the latter being the simpler and better method. If molded vertically a wet mixture is necessary, requiring a longer time to set, with the consequent delay in removing the molds.

The first of the accompanying illustrations shows a simple mold, which can be used with satisfactory results on the farm. This mold has a capacity of four posts, but larger molds could easily be made if desired. It consists of two end pieces (a) carrying lugs (b), between which are inserted strips (c). The several parts are held together with hooks and eyes as shown. To prevent any bulging of the side strips they are braced as illustrated. Dressed lumber at least one inch thick, and preferably 1½ inches, should be used. When finished the post measures 6x6 inches at the bottom, 6x3 inches at the top, and seven feet in length, having two parallel sides.



Wooden Mold for Making Fence-Posts with Four Tapering Sides.

If it is desired to have the posts square at both ends, the mold must be arranged as in the second illustration. This latter form of post is not as strong as the former, but requires less concrete in its construction. Great care in tamping is necessary to insure the corners of the mold being well filled, and if this detail is not carefully watched, the metal, being exposed in places, will be subject to rust.

Various devices have been suggested for attaching fence wires to the posts, the object of each being to secure a simple and permanent fastener or one admitting of easy renewal at any time. Probably nothing will answer the purpose better than a long staple or bent wire well embedded in the concrete, being twisted or bent at the end to prevent extraction. Galvanized metal must be used for fasteners, since they are not protected by the concrete. A piece of small flexible wire, about two inches in length, threading the staple and twisted several times with a pair of pliers, as illustrated, holds the line wire in position.

Cement posts should be reinforced in order to give them sufficient strength. This reinforcement can be common fence wire embedded in the cement as the post is made. If smooth wire or rods are used the ends should be bent over to prevent slipping. Twisted or barbed wire may be used, the former being the most easily handled. Galvanized wire is not necessary as it is protected by the cement from rusting. A reinforcing member in each corner of the post is probably the most efficient arrangement. These will give the desired strength.

In using a mold similar to those illustrated, it is necessary to provide a perfectly smooth and even platform of a size depending upon the number of posts to be molded. A cement floor, if accessible, may be used to advantage. The molds when in place are given a thin coating of soft soap, the platform or cement floor serving as bottom of mold, being treated in same way. About one and one-half inches of concrete are spread evenly over the bottom and carefully tamped, so as to reduce to a thickness of about one inch. A piece of board cut as in illustration will be found useful in leveling off the concrete to a desired thickness before tamping. On top of this layer two reinforcing members are placed, about one inch from the sides of the mold. The molds are then filled and tamped in thin layers to the level of the other two reinforcing members, the fasteners for fence-wires being inserted during the operation. These reinforcing members are adjusted as were the first two and the remaining one inch of concrete tamped and leveled off, thus completing the post so far as molding is concerned. To avoid sharp edges, which are easily chipped, triangle strips may be placed at the bottom of the mold along the sides, and when the molds have been filled and tamped, similar strips may be inserted at the top. The top edges may be beveled with a trowel or by running an edging tool having a triangular projection on its bottom along the edges.

The ends and sides of the mold may be removed after twenty-four hours, but the posts should not be handled for at least one week, during which time they must be sprinkled several times daily and protected from the sun and wind. The intermediate strips may be carefully withdrawn at the end of two or three days, but it is better to leave them in place until the posts are removed. Although a post may be hard and apparently strong when one week old, it will not attain its full strength in that time, and must be handled with the utmost care to prevent injury. Carelessness in handling green posts frequently results in the formation of fine cracks, which, though unnoticed at the time, give evidence of their presence later in the failure of the post.

Posts should be allowed to cure at least six days before being placed in the ground, and for this purpose it is recommended that when moved from the molding platform they be placed upon a smooth bed of moist sand and protected from the sun until thoroughly cured. During this period they should receive a thorough drenching at least once a day.

The life of the molds will depend upon the care with which they are handled. A coating of mineral oil or shellac may be used instead of soap to prevent the cement from sticking to the forms. As soon as the molds are removed they should be cleansed with a wire brush before being used again.

The cost of reinforced concrete fence posts, of course, depends upon the cost of labor and materials, and must necessarily vary in different localities.

The No-Account Rooster.—A sluggish rooster is not to be tolerated at all. The more lively and stirring the breeding flock is the better the hatches will be; all the care in the world won't help the eggs that are poor in vitality. It may possibly secure the hatch, but of what worth is it? One strong chick is worth a half dozen of the don't-care-if-I-die sort. Right now is the time to inspect the flock closely.

The Sluggish Hen.—If there are some sluggish hens in the flock, some with combs not up to color and that seem of a melancholy disposition, either sell them at once, or pen them from the nests. Such hens are not liable to be good layers, but occasionally they lay, but one doesn't wish to set eggs from such hens.

When Leg Weakness Comes.—Leg weakness sometimes affects the hens through mid-winter, and while not fatal, nor a contagious disease, it fixes the hens for the ax, and for nothing else. Their day of usefulness as egg producers is done. Where correct feed has been given there is scarcely ever a case of leg-weakness.

Select Eggs Carefully.—To secure good hatches one must do more than select the nice smooth eggs that are gathered; the hens that lay the eggs must be in prime condition; not too fat, yet not run down in flesh or vitality.

A Great Difference.

"Margaret, it was very naughty of you to make such a fuss. You said if I'd buy you that new dollie you'd go to the dentist's without a murmur."

"I didn't murmur, muvver, I screamed."

Together they were seated on the shifting sands by the sad sea waves—his arm about her waist.

"Do you like this place?" he asked.

"Well, I can't say that I am stuck on the place," she replied, as she nestled a little closer to his person, "but I certainly do enjoy the surroundings."

Jacob's Wonderful Voyage

By Martin Anderson Nexol

BETWEEN two trips to Germany, Morten Anderson, the skipper, went home and to bed. The whole thing was plain enough. In the little fishing hamlet people were not in the habit of taking to their beds because they felt sick, and when a man did, it simply meant change. Mrs. Anderson, therefore, began at once to arrange the necessary things with undertaker, sexton and butcher, while people began to look for another skipper for the sloop Andreas.

There were men enough right there who knew something about the sea; every shopkeeper and tradesman could tell just what should be done. It was a pleasure to hear them in the evening criticising every vessel that came in sight.

But here, where there was a responsibility to be taken, every one modestly refused. All the real sailors were away in the tropics or on sailing trips to Greenland, and it looked very much as if the Andreas would have to remain in port all summer with its cargo of stone.

There was Jacob, of course—he could have done it as easily as he could chew tobacco. Jacob had been on the long voyages during his youth, had been pirate captain and slave dealer and caught whales—his name was on the blacklist in Copenhagen, it was said, and when he spoke of the sea every one else felt insignificant and shut up. That was twenty years ago; now Jacob looked after his little shop and went fishing once in a while, but he was like a stranded whale—there were always breakers around him. When Jacob went down to the store in the morning, summer or winter, with his hairy breast exposed, it was as if a ship of the line passed by the little windows.

Nobody knew anything about his experiences as a sailor but what he had told himself, but, that was enough. He was not the kind of a man who discussed things with any one or allowed any one to doubt. Jacob had said it was so, and that settled it, no matter how unreasonable it might sound.

Everyone thought of him while the old sloop drew more and more water—Jacob could take it to Germany if he wanted to. But no one dared say a word to him about it or even hint at it. Andreas was no full rigger.

But one morning it came all by itself. No one knew where it came from, but the rumor went all over that Jacob himself would take the sloop to Germany. It was very exciting and everyone looked at Jacob who might have something to say. But Jacob smiled scornfully—"to Germany! Mrs. Jungemann goes for milk every morning and crosses two gutters, why did they not ask her to do it?"

So people kept quiet and waited. All the trips Jacob had ever made were like fairy tales—he would get something out of his voyage, too.

Jacob took care of his shop as usual until Saturday evening, then he put the key in his pocket and went on board with Niels Kaas, the old swineherd, who had been a cabin boy when he was young and knew something about cooking. The whole town was astir when they heaved the anchor. At last Jacob was to be seen in his proper element. And he was a sight, indeed; he thundered out orders and made the old lame Kaas jump like a rabbit.

When Andreas had got clear of the shore and caught the wind, Jacob steered her only for a few minutes longer, then he placed old Kaas at the helm. "You just steer straight," he said; "you go by the stars, and when they set you have mastheads. And when you see Germany, call me."

Then he turned in as calmly as if he had been ashore.

Old Kaas steered and kept on the lookout for Germany. He got a little twisted on the stars, but he kept the two mastheads in a line, and sent many admiring thoughts to his wonderful skipper below. All night he looked for the German shore, and when day broke with a heavy fog, so that he could see nothing, he listened attentively. Kaas understood a little German and had no doubt that he could tell when he was there.

A little later he heard indistinct noises of traffic ahead. He stamped his foot as a signal and soon Jacob appeared on deck.

"Well, we are all right," he said, "just as I knew we would be. Listen Kaas, those are German voices. I think we had better drop anchor till the fog lifts a little."

Kaas gave the helm to Jacob and went forward to the anchor, but before he got it out the vessel touched the bottom. "Say," said Jacob, "we have got rather close to Germany, but I know exactly where we are."

And Kaas looked at his skipper in open-mouthed admiration and they both lit their pipes and sat down on the hatchway, waiting for the fog to raise.

Occasionally they talked about the noises from land and how strange they sounded.

"Now, really, that wheelbarrow squeaks just like Rasmus Kjoller's," Kaas suddenly exclaimed, straining his ears. "I would give a good deal to be home again."

They could hear people talk, but it was impossible to catch the words. "That is German," Jacob said; "those Dutchmen always talk as if they had a hot potato in their mouth."

Now the church steeple appeared above the fog. "Look at that," Kaas shouted; "the weathervane is crooked just like the one at home."

"It is, indeed, Kaas! And see that breakwater; they have just fixed it up like ours and made it twenty feet longer."

Little by little the fog raised and showed to the astonished men a town exactly like their home, with the walk along the short, Martha's flowering elderberry bush and everything. It was like a dream and Kaas opened his mouth to say something, as did Jacob too. But none of them said a word; they just sat and stared. More and more people appeared on the shore, and they knew every one of them.

A shadow crept across Jacob's face, he arose slowly, went aft and lowered the boat. Kaas dared not speak to him—he just crawled down into the boat and rowed them ashore. There was a big crowd on the shore, but Jacob went straight through it to his house and no one dared say a word to him.

But as time passed and he recovered somewhat he began to speak of it himself, and as people were not in the habit of correcting him the tale took on more and more peculiar form. Jacob was a hero, and little by little his wonderful voyage to Germany and back in one night with a load of stone became one in the long line of events that marked his life, the most wonderful of them all.

Sanguine.

"How's times?" inquired a tourist.

"Oh, pretty tolerable," responded the old native, who was sitting on a stump. "I had some trees to cut down, but a cyclone come along and saved me the trouble."

"Fine."

"Yes, and then the lightning set fire to the brush pile and saved me the trouble of burnin' it."

"Remarkable. But what are you doing now?"

"Oh, nothin' much. Jest waitin' for an earthquake to come along and shake the potatoes out of the ground."—Everybody's Magazine.

Every house member from the Ninth district voted for the tonnage tax.

Just to show that there is no bad feeling, the Standard Oil company might donate that $29,000,000 to some worthy charity.

The corrupt practice act has been partially repealed, and the candidate for office can spend all the money he likes. This is hardly reaching toward the goal of political honesty.

A lot of the country members who voted against the tonnage tax will have some tall explaining to do when they get back to their home people. The atmosphere is a little different out on the farm and in the country store.

When the congressional list is ready Mr. Steneerson may find an adversary in Hans O. Bjorge of Becker county. Mr. Bjorge is author of the tonnage tax bill. He made a notable argument for it, and won a great victory. He is worthy of advancement.

United States District Attorney Kealing of Indianapolis has resigned rather than participate in the prosecution of Pulitzer et al. for libel under the pretext of the late president. In his letter of resignation he says: "I believe the principle involved is a dangerous one, striking at the very foundation of our government."

A man in one state who stole three chickens was sentenced to a year in prison. A man in another state who choked his baby to death because its crying annoyed him, got two years. And so justice proceeds on its even stride and never seems to notice that in all its pictures its scales are significantly lop-sided.

Down in Pennsylvania the business methods of the warden of the penitentiary were questoned. The penitentiary being full of bankers, three of them were selected to check up the warden's books and they found a shortage of $25,000. All things are possible in Pennsylvania, but the idea of employing convict experts to check up the books of a crooked warden is a trifle unique, even for that state.

During a recent meeting of hotel men in New York city, when there was discussed certain proposed means of protecting hotels against "beats," a Western manager told of the sad case of one proprietor in St. Louis who had been "done." Many months afterward, learning the whereabouts of the man who had decamped without the formality of paying, the owner sent him the following note: "Dear Sir: I would esteem it a favor if you would at once send me the amount of your bill." Imagine the disgust of the hotel man when, in a few days, he received an answer in these terms: "Dear Sir: Certainly. The amount of my bill is 17.50."

The gross earnings of the railroads of Minnesota showed a falling off of $11,013,000 in 1908 compared with the previous year. This means that the state suffers a loss of revenue of $44,520. Returns from the 36 roads of the state are now in the hands of the state railroad and warehouse commission. The complete totals are as follows: Gross earnings of roads for 1907, $88,888,946 taxes for 1907, $3,555,557.84; gross earnings for 1908, $77,875,938.29; taxes for 1908, $3,115,037.48.

It is rumored that Justice Calvin L. Brown, of the state supreme court, will succeed Judge Purdy on the federal bench. This would be a happy appointment, for there are few more learned jurists than Justice Brown. In the event of this appointment Governor Johnson would appoint a successor to Judge Brown, and as these places are usually recruited from the district bench it is likely the honor would fall upon either Judge Bunn of St. Paul or Judge Brooks of Minneapolis.

Mr. Jacobson made a little speech before the legislature the other day and declared that the average public officer didn't earn one-fourth of his salary. A spirit of economy is all right, and it must be admitted that the pubilc service costs too much, but Mr. Jacobson's indictment is too sweeping, and casts doubt upon the success of a republican form of government. Public officials as a general rule are not overpaid. It is the perquisites rather than the salaries that should be scrutinized more closely.

The bill to abolish capital punishment, one of the measures that makes its appearance regularly at each succeeding session of the legislature, was killed by the house last week. It was introduced by Mr. Bendixen and came from the committee on crimes and punishments recommended to pass. When taken up in committee of the whole there was a lively debate and as much oratory as a more important measure would have received, but the vote was overwhelmingly for indefinite postponement.

Says Congressman Tawney (Rep.) of this state: "There must soon come a decided halt in this great expenditure of money," and he suggested that the navy is the proper place to begin. When the people begin to feel the burden of the national expenditure a little harder, he said, they will find out and realize that 70 cents out of every dollar of the federal appropriations goes for wars in the past or "wars that we are looking for." Of this 70 per cent, he said, 30 goes for pensions to those who have fought in wars past, which no one begrudges, but 40 goes to maintain and build up our army and navy.

There died by his own hand in Washington a few days ago, an old and destitute man named Hinton R. Helper, says the Little Falls Herald. This unknown old man, in the days before the Civil war, wrote a book called "The Impending Crisis." The book tried to prove, and in the judgment of impartial historians did prove, that slavery was a tremendous economic wrong to the Southern whites who did not own slaves. It was a sort of economic Uncle Tom's Cabin, and if the "poor whites" had been able to read and understand it, there would have been no Civil war, for the great mass of the Confederate army, men who did not own slaves would never have submitted to a system which did them economic injustice. Helper was a southerner. His book was circulated extensively in the north, and undoubtedly helped to elect Lincoln.

Senator F. H. Petersons' "old soldier" bill, which was passed under suspension of the rules by the Senate Friday, is doomed to death in the lower house. This is the bill designed to compel Governor Johnson to reappoint S. W. Leavitt on the state board of control. It is admittedly a partizan measure, and was indorsed by the republican steering committee in the senate, but the house republicans have rejected it. The nine members of the house steering committee met recently and decided that the measure shall either be killed outright or left to perish in the hands of a committee. It was referred Wednesday to the committee on military affairs.

THE TARIFF BILL.

These are the general features of the Payne tariff revision measure:

An inheritance tax provision based on the New York tax inheritance law.

No stamp taxes.

Hide placed on the free list.

Iron ore on the free list.

Tariff on lumber reduced to $1 per 1000 feet.

Dingley rates as to wool untouched.

Agricultural implements to be admitted free from such countries as admit similar American products free.

Countervailing duty on petroleum retained.

Tariff on steel cut in half.

Most of these provisions of the new bill were determined upon at a final meeting of the committee on ways and means.

POLITICAL PLEDGES.

It is generally believed that a political pledge, made by a candidate for office, should be redeemed, and the so-called "insurgent" republicans from Minnesota who violated their promises to vote against Speaker Cannon will hear from the people at home at the next election. On this point the St. Peter Herald says:

"Only two Minnesota congressmen, Davis and Lindberg, had the courage to vote against the re-election of Speaker Cannon. Neither had much to lose by joining in the insurgent movement, but it may be said for them that they have redeemed their campaign pledges. With Congressman Miller of Duluth matters are quite the reverse. In making his fight aginst J. Adam Bede he declared himself violently opposed to Cannon and in favor of revision of the rules. When the test came in Washington, however, he repudiated both propositions, casting his ballot for Cannon and voting with the regulars against a change in the rules. Davis and Lindbergh must expect to be disciplined, they will be placed upon important committees and receive no consideration from the men who control congressional affairs, but their political futures are infinitely more promising than that of Miller, who will be called sharply to account by the voters of the Eighth district."

ANOTHER ONE PAPER TOWN

Glencoe Enterprise: The Renville County Free Press, published at Olivia by P. F. Dehnel, was sold last week to County Attorney Frank Murray of that county, who has suspended its publication and has sold the plant and good will of the business to J. R. Landy, publisher of the Olivia Times. Olivia, consequently, now has but one newspaper. Throughout the country, in towns of 3000 and less, there is a growing sentiment favoring but one newspaper. The advantage of this is too well known to require reiteration. One paper, from a commercial and economical standpoint, is far more satisfactory to the business interests of any community than two, for where public patronage is undivided it is possible for the publisher to print a newspaper of a standard that is in keeping with the life of a community. One "real" newspaper, is eminently preferable to two "excuses." Editor Landy is a capable journalist, and will undoubtedly make every effort to make the Times a truly representative newspaper of the county seat of Renville county. To do this it is necessary to treat impartially in its columns the people of that community, and to present without color the various opinions advanced regarding matters of public interest and importance that may arise from time to time, yet to possess the temerity to comment favorably or unfavorably upon any subject whenever comment is warranted.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Norman County Herald: We believe in giving the devil his due, and will state that Congressman Steenerson of this district was the only congressman to vote against the subsidy bill.

Moorhead Citizen: Andrew Carnegie has announced a contribution for the purpose of reforming Pittsburg. At last it would seem, he has found a method by which he might die poor.

New Ulm Review: Whatever division of sentiment there may be throughout the country as regards Theodore Roosevelt, there certainly exists none as to his sensible and womanly wife. The whole nation takes its hat off to the retiring mistress of the White House.

Iron Trade Journal: A bill prohibiting actresses from wearing red, white and blue tights has been introduced in the legislature. Talk about freak legislation! Ten chances to one, the author of the bill is baldheaded and a regular front row patron of some near-decent show house, and has introduced the bill to fool the folks at home.

Austin Transcript: Roosevelt's special messages to congress will be good reading for a generation. They contain the wisest discussion of public policies and needs which have been issued in seven years past. If congress had heeded them more intead of harking so much to the corporate interests, the country would have been far better off.

Rochester Bulletin: Taft's appointment of J. M. Dickinson of Tennessee to the cabinet position of secretary of war is being criticised by the narrow minded. Mr. Dickenson is a pronounced democratic leader, but an able man of unimpeachable character, and Taft's independence in the selection of his cabinet is a most encouraging sign.

Barnesville Record Review: It is to be hoped that in the "push and pull" for all manner of appropriations our legislators will not lose sight of the great and urgent need of an appropriation for a suitable building in which house the thousands of valuable volumes, portraits, and newspaper files, curios and relics in the possession of the State Historical society. The five rooms allotted to the societey in the new capitol are already overcrowded and there are thousands of dollars' worth of its possessions stored in the old capitol, where the danger from fire is great, and as a vast amount of this property cannot be duplicated at any price, it would seem the height of folly to permit present conditions to continue a day longer than necessary.

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is due to impurities and poisons in the blood. Instead of being rich, strong and healthy, the circulation has become infected with germs of disease which destroy the rich, red corpuscles that furnish nourishment and strength to the body, and reduced this vital fluid to such a weak, watery condition that it is no longer able to keep the system in health, or ward off the countless diseases and disorders that assail it. The loss of these red corpuscles takes the color and glow of health from the cheek, and we see pale, sallow faces and washed out, chalky complexions among the first symptoms of Malaria. But Malaria is a general systemic disease, and as the blood becomes more heavily loaded with its germs we have more serious and complicated symptoms; the impure blood having its effect on all parts of the body. The appetite fails, digestion is weakened, chills and slight fever are frequent, and the sufferer loses energy and ambition because of a constant tired-out and "no account" feeling. The lack of necessary nourishment and healthful qualities in the blood causes boils and abscesses, skin affections, and in some cases sores and ulcers to break out, and sometimes the patient is prostrated with a spell of malarial fever which may leave his health permanently impaired. To cure Malaria both a blood purifier and tonic are necessary, in order to remove the cause and at the same time build up the system from its weakened and run-down condition. S. S. S. is the medicine best fitted for this work. It is the most perfect of all blood purifiers, and the purely vegetable ingredients of which it is composed make it the greatest and safest of all tonics. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and removes every trace of impurity or poison, and at the same time gives to the blood the health-sustaining qualities it needs. It cures Malaria thoroughly and permanently because it removes the germs and poisons which produce the disease, and while doing this tones up and strengthens every part of the system. When S. S. S. has cleansed the blood the symptoms pass away, the healthy color returns to the complexion, the old tired, depressed feeling is gone, and the entire health is renewed. Book with information about Malaria and any medical advice free.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi river and became so impregnated with Malaria that for a year I was almost a physical wreck. I tried a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures, and Malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S. S. S. The result was that after taking it for awhile I was as well and strong as I ever was. I have never had a chill since nor the slightest symptom of Malaria. I hope others will be benefited by my experience, and with that end in view I give this testimonial, knowing that S. S. S. is the best remedy for Malaria.

BAD ROADS EXPENSIVE

L. W. Page, Federal Highway Expert, Says Burden Falls Upon Farmers.

Minnesota farmers pay 7,150,000 in bad roads taxes annually, according to L. W. Page, of Washington, D. C. director of the United States office of public roads. "Nothing retards the agricultural growth of a state so much as poor roads," says Mr. Page. "There are 80,000 miles of road in this state, and the people of the state cannot neglect to improve them if the state is to progress as it might."

He showed from the cost per ton per mile to haul products in this and other countries that the cost could be cut down three and one half times if our roads were as good as those in Europe.

He complimented Minnesota for adopting the highway commission plan of taking care of the roads, that of having an able man in charge of the work. State aid and the commission plan embodies the most advanced ideas in road supervision.

He showed that it cost at least $3,600,000 to haul an average Minnesota crop to the markets at 23 cents a ton. In Europe it would cost 10 cents a ton, or $1,500,000 less than here. This excess in cost of marketing the wheat comes directly from the pockets of the farmers. In the same way there is an excess cost of $150,000 in handling the corn crop, and a total of 7,150,000 more than is needful for all of the crops of the state. This does not take into account the other large loss from inability to market when prices are right.

He pointed out that the farmers can control the markets with good roads and that no other state is in such good condition to take up good-roads work. The debt of Minnesota is small, 200 times smaller than that of Massachusetts. Mr. Page thinks that $500,000 a year spent by the state would put Minnesota in the front rank in road construction.

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescripts on forces the clogged-up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home, who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disoders or Rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good Rheumatism prescriptions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it, you want it badly. 23-25

County Won Ditch Suit.

Ada Herald: Judge Grindeland has filed an order in the suit brought last December by Dan Linnihan of Red Lake Falls, to receive an amount over $700 claimed as balance due on the contrat for Ditch No. 5, in Lee township, which was established in 1903. The county set up a counter claim that innihan did not finish his contract according to the specifications, stating that payments had been made in accordance with the estimates of Engineer Boyer. Judge Grindeland decided in favor of the county. The case was one of considerable interest. County Attorney Brattaland represented the county and C. E. Boughton, of Red Lake Falls, appeared for Linnihan.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments, must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

Eczema Came on Legs and Ankles—Could Not Wear Shoes Because

Of Bad Scaling and Itching.

"I have been successfully cured of dry eczema. I was inspecting the removal of noxious weeds from the edge of a river and was constantly in the dust from the weeds. At night I cleansed my limbs but felt a prickly sensation. I paid no attention to it for two years but I noticed a scum on my legs like fish scales. I did not attend to it until it came to be too itchy and sore and began getting two running sores. My ankles were all sore and scabby and I could not wear shoes. I had to use carpet and felt slippers for weeks. I got a cake of the Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. In less than ten days I could put on my boots and in less than three weeks I was free from the confounded itching. Capt. George P. KAISER'S LADY DRAGON.

Guards the Imperial Court Against Feminine Undesirables.

There is at Kaiser Wilhelm' Berlin palace an Oberhofmeisterin, a lady who has been described as a court chamberlain in petticoats, who has to make personal acquaintance with every lady before she attends court.

A ball at the Berlin court is an affair of much ceremony, but curious to say, there are no cloak rooms in the palace and all wraps have to be left in their owners' carriages.

The imperial couple do not dance, but they watch with interest the pirouetting of their subjects in the waltz, and they delight in the graceful minuet dancing for which there has been a furore in Berlin these two seasons past.

The courts in Berlin are conducted with even more state than in England, says the Gentlewoman. The ladies wear no trains, it is true, to their court frocks, but it is expected of them to spend lavishly on their clothes, to don magnificient jewels and never by any chance to wear black, and black, by the way, is also disallowed at St. Petersburg. At a Berlin they have an odd way of separating the married women and girls. Wives and daughters are marshalled off to separate rooms before the fun of the fair begins.

DIDN'T REALIZE

How Injurious Coffee Really Was.

Many persons go on drinking coffee year after year without realizing that it is the cause of many obscure but persistent ailments.

The drug—caffeine—in coffee and tea, is very like uric acid and is often the cause of rheumatic attacks which, when coffee is used habitually, become chronic.

A Washington lady said, recently: "I am sixty-five and have had a good deal of experience with coffee. I consider it very injurious and the cause of many diseases. I am sure it causes decay of teeth in children.

"When I drank coffee I had sick spells and still did not realise that coffee could be so harmful, till about a year ago I had rheumatism in my arms and fingers, got so nervous I could not sleep, and was all run down.

"At last, after finding that medicines did me no good, I decided to quit coffee entirely and try Postum. After using it six months I fully recovered my health beyond all expectations, can sleep sound and my rheumatism is all gone." "There's a Reason."

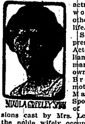
NO WOMAN IS TOO PRETTY TO DARN HER HUSBAND'S SOCKS

BY NIXOLA GREELEY-SMITH.



NIXOLA GREELEY-SMITH

"There's nothing a good woman cares so much for as her husband and children. That's just as true of an actress as of a woman in any other sphere of life."

So Mrs. Spooner, president of the Actor's Church alliance; for years manager of her own theater in Brooklyn, and mother of Edna May and Cecil Spooner, disposed of certain aspersions cast by Mrs. Leslie Carter on the noble wifely occupation of darning socks, which, according to Miss Margaret Illington (Mrs. Daniel Frohman), represents the summit of her earthly desires.

"Mrs. Frohman is far too pretty to darn any one's socks," Mrs. Carter was quoted as saying, and then she added: "Few men have any appreciation of the home their wives struggle to provide for them. That is the fault of the progressive times. The men want change; they want something new.

"The laughter and the lights and the glamour are the hearts' desire. They don't want to be confined to the endless monotony of a home with just one woman in it. They love the sparkle of eyes, the gleam of wine, the fascination of the variety that comes and goes, comes and goes constantly.

"Not Always True."

"Years ago it was not like this. My grandfather and grandmother lived together for sixty-eight years, could never bear to be out of each other's sight, and died six weeks of each other. But times have changed. Now the men don't care for the droning tedium of four square walls. Children are a nuisance. Daily routine is a bore. The girl who gives up a brilliant opportunity to venture in the uncertain realms of home is taking a risk."

"Both my daughters agree with Mrs. Carter on one point," continued Mrs. Spooner, after she had read very carefully Mrs. Carter's sentiments. "They declare they would never give up their art, their careers for any time. I tell them it is just because the right man hasn't come along. But after all, why should any man ask such a sacrifice of a woman. It is possible to be a good wife and a good actress at the same time."

"How about a good mother?" I inquired.

Most Carefully Reared.

"Stage children are the most carefully reared in the world," Mrs. Spooner answered. "I can't be too emphatic on that point. Only the children of multimillionaires receive the educational advantages and the supervision that are given to the children of actors and actresses. My daughter, Cecil Spooner, has been on the stage since she was two and a half years old; my daughter Edna May, since she was five. The children traveled with Mr. Spooner and me. They had a governess with them always. They had all the advantages of travel, and we never remained long enough in any one place for them to contract the undesirable associations that the most carefully watched boys and girls living in the smaller cities are apt to contract at school or even at church. This is true of practically all the children of actors and actresses. In my opinion they are the best reared and the most loved in America."

"Now as to darning socks," Mrs. Spooner pronounced, when I had led her gently back to the homelier topic, "every one knows that the test of a good woman and a good wife is the way she stands by her husband in adversity. If it becomes necessary for her to darn her husband's socks, why of course she will do it. But I see no reason why a wife who can make money at some more congenial occupation should waste her time darning socks when she is able to hire some one else who needs the money to do it. I think a woman should do whatever she is best fitted for, and to that extent I've always been a woman's rights woman—and I am a suffragist.

"Our Own Little Home."

"When I was first married to Mr. Spooner, in Centerville, Iowa, he had his own newspaper, and we had our own little home. But I had to do my own cooking, and as soon as I was married I bought the best cook book I could find and started to learn how. I haven't cooked anything for many years now, but I don't believe there is anything I would be afraid to attempt.

"It is the ambition of every young wife to help her husband in every way, and I believe there are more happy marriages today than ever before.

Why, the mere fact that people stay married nowadays, when divorce is so easy, is an indication that they are happy.

"Men and women have not changed in my lifetime. Men are no more fickle, women no more ambitious than they have always been. And I fully believe there is as much domestic happiness in the theatrical profession as in any other.

"The stage seems to stand more as a unit in the public eye than does any other occupation. When an individual actor does anything good he gets the credit, but when he does anything bad the whole profession gets the blame.

"HOME NO BAR TO STAGE SUCCESS," SAYS MAY ROBSON.

Miss Robson for Nearly Twenty Years Has been the Wife of Dr. A. H. Brown, Surgeon of the New York Police and Fire Departments.

"There is no reason why a woman should not be successful on the stage and in society as well," said Miss Robson. "As to the home—that is something it is not necessary to discuss. A woman can be successful on the stage and be a good wife and mother, too. There is no question of that. My home is my joy."

Happily Married Couple.

"But think of the happy married people on the stage. There are Mr. and Mrs. Faversham, for instance. I believe they have two lovely children.

"I have seen a good deal of social life, as well as of stage life," Mrs. Spooner continued, "and the husbands and wives I know are generally very happy in their homes and families. I don't think a girl takes as much risk in marrying today as at any other time in history. Women are more esteemed and respected than ever before—as I said before, I don't think it is always necessary for a woman to choose between domestic life and a profession. It often happens that she can pursue both careers successfully.

"But, of course, if she has to choose between a career and the best interests of her husband and children, she will put aside the career.

"I received a letter from my daughter Cecil, who is touring the South now, which illustrates the strength of the home feeling in a woman. You remember, when we all acted together in the Bijou theater, in Brooklyn, and lived over the theater?

"Well, of course, Cecil alone is making more money now than we all did then. Yet she wrote speaking of the old Bijou days: 'Oh, Mum! My, but those were happy times.'

"Of course," Mrs. Spencer concluded, "there are people, just as Mrs. Carter says, who prefer the glamor of change, the sparkle of wine, to home life with one woman, and who think children a nuisance. It takes all sorts of people to make a world. I don't mind saying I've learned more of that kind in the two years I've lived in New York than I did in a lifetime of Brooklyn. But they are a very small minority of the whole people even here."

MRS. LESLIE CARTER

The American Consul.

What gorgeous pictures of foreign lands enthrall the imagination of the American schoolboy as he bends over his geography and thinks of the American consul and his life and labors in those distant countries laid out on the maps before him and delineated in irregular patches tinted in red, yellow, green and blue, with round black dots to locate the capitals and commercial centers of the world!

With him, and indeed with most of his elders, the popular conception of a United States consul is of an appointee of the last incoming administration, who has "done the state some service"—along strictly partisan lines—and is being furnished a trip and residence abroad at the expense of Uncle Sam, in requital of such service. As represented in many popular plays, short stories and novels, he is pictured as a "jolly good fellow," who lives a life of ease and luxury, with nothing to worry him and little to do but wear a dress coat at private and public festas, visit and hobnob with civil, military and naval dignitaries, and bask in the full sunlight of social honors and entertainment. From such liesse and official dolce far niente he is supposed, at times, to spring to the rescue of distressed damsels and condemned filibusters, and interpose between murgant continental authorities, and aegis gant continental authorieles, the aegis of the republic and the inviolable folds of the American flag.

As a matter of fact, there is much about the life of an American consul, in most localities, which is a charming interlude between busy and sordid years of strenuous business life. The hitherto obscure political worker of some "close deestric'" uncommonly prosaic in the daily life and avocations of its inhabitants, becomes, on receipt of his appointment and its ratification by the government to which he is accredited, the social equal of nobles and officials, of gentlemen and ladies, with whom he could not possibly visit or associate in his individual capacity. In many localities the climate is superb, the views enchanting, the opportunities for scholarly, anticuarian, musical and artistic investigation unrivaled, and the list of pleasures and divertisements long, varied and cheaply indulged. In other appointments the lover of travel among barbarous and half-civilized peoples and of exciting hunting and exploring expeditions finds ample opportunity to vary comparatively rare periods of pressing duty with adventures which will always furnish pleasant memories in after life.—Winslow Hall, March National Magazine.

This was overheard in the lobby of a big hotel in Cincinnati when a busload of traveling salesmen came from the station. Every man of them, as he signed the register, paused to shake hands with the hotel clerk—fatherly old fellow who had been there many years. "Ah," said one of them to the clerk, "it's a good thing you're still on deck, Uncle Dave; I don't think the house could run without you." "Couldn't it, though!" said Uncle Dave. "You fellows would come in here, and if there was a strange clerk you'd say, 'Where's Uncle Dave?' And the clerk would say, 'Why, didn't you hear? He died a month ago.' And then you'd say, 'Well, I'll be darned! That's too bad. Say, when'll dinner be ready?'"

Drawing the Line.

"Of course I'll love and honor her,"
the blushing bridegroom said,
And then he gave the bride a hearty smack,

The Widow

She Learns the Objection to Women's Smoking—and Quits!

BY HELEN ROWLAND.

"I SUPPOSE," remarked the widow, daintily blowing a puff of smoke from a gilt-tipped cigarette, with the inconsequential abandon of the perf t amateur, "that you think it's very dreadful!"

HELEN ROWLAND.

The bachelor glanced cautiously around to make sure that no one was coming and drew the hangings of the cozy corner a little closer.

"I think it very—unattractive," he replied, with cold disapproval.

"And yet," sighed the widow, "you admired Mrs. Vanderbilt and those club women for doing it."

"Pardon me," corrected the bachelor, "I admired the frank way in which they did it. Besides, I am not going to marry Mrs. Vanderbilt nor—"

"I didn't know you were going to marry me!" exclaimed the widow in mock surprise.

"Didn't you?" The bachelor looked astonished. "Then I must have neglected to tell you—"

"Besides," broke in the widow hastily, "cigarette smoking isn't really wicked or sinful—or even vulgar."

"No," retorted the bachelor bitterly, "it's merely silly, and mannish and outre, and unhealthy, and shocking, and foolish."

"Oh!" exclaimed the widow with a sigh of delight. "How fascinating!"

"What!"

"I've always wanted to do something shocking and foolish," returned the widow cheerfully, "and now that I've found out what to do—you aren't going to scare me into being good, by saying 'Boo!'" and she drew another puff, which ended in a coughing spell.

The bachelor started.

"By saying—what?"

"I suppose you think it's very dreadful."

"That it's unbecoming," explained the widow, "or that it will make my nose red, or spoil my figure, or ruin my reputation. That's a little way you men have of frightening us off your preserves and retaining all the nice, enjoyable, comfy things for yourselves. Her reputation is the white woman's burden? Every time we try to do anything interesting or exciting or up to date you wave us away by crying 'Naughty! naughty!' It will spoil its little white complexion, and its little white reputation, and its little white soul! Poof!" and she blew a ring of smoke right in the bachelor's face.

"A woman's soul," announced the bachelor virtuously, "is like a white sheet of paper. Black marks on it show—"

"Oh, dear me!" scoffed the widow. "If our souls are as uninteresting as blank sheets of paper, it's about time we were marking them up a bit. Besides, you might as well say that putting perfume on our petticoats, or using tooth powder, or curling our front hair is bad form, because some women do it, as to say that cigarette smoking—"

"Oh, well," broke in the bachelor desperately, "smoke a pipe if you like. Be a perfect gentleman—if you think it's pretty!"

"I don't think it's pretty," replied the widow. "But," she added, leaning back with a sigh, "being 'nice and feminine' is so stupid! I don't wonder that you men find the girls who smoke cigarettes and give studio teas and say 'damn it!' so much more interesting."

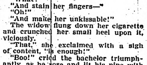
"Do we?" inquired the bachelor, dryly. "Yet we generally marry the 'nice' girls."

"How good of you! How gratifying!" exclaimed the widow. "And yet," she continued, thoughtfully studying the tip of her cigarette, "I never knew a girl so 'nice' that most any man would not coax her to smoke a cigarette, or to kiss him, or to do something 'not nice,' did you?"

The bachelor reddened and moved uneasily in his corner.

"Oh, well," he answered helplessly, "that's just to—to see if she won't refuse, and we admire the girl who does refuse—"

"And never call on her again," finished the widow with a sniff, "while you immediately take the girl who doesn't refuse out to dinner. But that isn't the question! The question is, how do cigarettes affect a woman—how do they injure her? They don't make her silly, like rouge, nor make her old, nor make her wicked, nor—"



"Putting perfume on our petticoats."

"No," cried the bachelor, desperately, "but they do something ten times worse than that!"

"Worse!" The widow nearly dropped her cigarette.

"They get in her hair—"

"What?"

"And stain her fingers—"

"Oh!"

"And make her unkissable!"

The widow flung down her cigarette and crunched her small heel upon it, viciously.

"That," she exclaimed with a sigh of content, "is enough!"

"Boo!" cried the bachelor triumphantly, as he rose and lit his pipe with the virtuous air of a man who has saved an erring soul.

THE MEDIAEVAL BAG

Hangs Half Way to the Knee and Is Attached to Skirt.

Only on the stage so far have we been used to seeing the large, full bag or pocket made of the material of the gown and suspended by ribbons to match, or often links of gold or silver.

Now we are to have them on smart house gowns made according to mediaeval style. All those who have been enraptured by the wonderful costumes in "Otello," as sung in the Philadelphia opera house, have given their approval to this artistic and convenient pocket.

Desdemona wears one to match each gown. They are made of satin, embroidered and jeweled.

Our new costumes are patterned after the old Italian ones, as is evidenced by the straight panel front and back, the long, tight sleeve with wrist ruffle and the shallow, round, open neck.

Old Florentine brocades and satins with velvet flowers are back in favor, and therefore it was quite natural to add the huge bag that was suspended from the hips.

These are not only to be put on afternoon costumes, but have already been seen on a few brilliant evening gowns. On these the bag was attached to the skirt so it would not swing forward, and in it was put the tiny fan, the handkerchief and any other tiny trifles that a woman carries.

WHERE WOMEN PROPOSE

And the Man's Mother Says Yes or No Without Consulting Him.

Shall women propose is a question which does not bother the Hopi Indian maiden, who not only invites her chosen one to matrimony but if necessary drags him to the altar, or its Hopi substitute, by main force.

When a girl has selected her victim—this ungallant way of putting it is that of a writer in the Travel Magazine—she simply calls upon his mother and talks business. If the old lady lends a willing ear the matter is settled forthwith and the young man has no course left open excepting to bow to the inevitable. At times, violence has been resorted to to drag an unwillingly youth to the altar.

Once the matter has been settled to the satisfaction of the women concerned the girl goes to work to grind meal for the prospective mother-in-law for a period of thirty days, while the man in the case is set to work to weave his future bride's wedding garments. At the expiration of the thirty days the ceremony takes place.

Whenever a Hopi maiden feels that the time has arrived when she should begin to think seriously of choosing a husband she does up her hair in two gigantic whorls, one over each ear. These are danger signals, warning the young men of the community that she is gunning for a husband. Sometimes it happens that half a dozen or more young men will take to the tall timber on learning that the whorls have appeared upon the head of a young woman. Flight is their only hope, as the mothers are so jealous of the prerogative of their sex that they rarely interpose in behalf of an unwilling son, and the fathers are not consulted.

QUALITY IN DEATH SENTENCES.

leasure That Caused Dr. Guillotin to Favor Machine Bearing His Name.

The titular author of the guillotine—an appliance recently again dragged nto the light of day—has suffered a ate by no means uncommon. Regarded with horror, Dr. Joseph Ignace uillotin was in reality a philanthroist deserving of the highest respect.

Born at Saintes in Poitou in 1738, of hard-working, austere, middle-class stock and educated at the Jesuit College of Bordeaux, he began life as a professor under the same roof. Determining later to study medicine he brilliantly passed the necessary examinations in Paris, for a time practising at Reims, afterward with his wife returning to the capital. By Paris he was named depute of the Tiers Etat on the outbreak of the Revolution, his first measures in the Assemblee Constituante being hygienic. He forthwith brought about the better ventilation and cleanliness of the building, and when cold weather set in the installation of heating apparatus.

The doctor did not stop here. Horror-stricken at the slow tortures of the death penalty inflicted upon the non-privileged classes, decapitation being allowed only in the case of the noblesse, on Dec. 1, 1789, he proposed the absolute equality of punishments. The motion was adopted and breakings on the wheel and similar atrocities became things of the past. But the worthy Poitevin doctor did not invent the machine fastened to his name and four years later put to such fearful use.

In after years—he quietly practiced his profession till 1814—the very step he had taken for humanity's sake haunted him like a nightmare.

The Canadian Buffalo Herds.

The magnificent herd of buffaloes which Winnipeg once owned and which was bred from stock given by Lord Strathcona is now almost extinct, only two animals being left, and these in such a condition that they are not likely to survive the winter. The herd was once the second largest in the Dominion, but the animals were neglected and improperly pastured. The recommendations of the superintendent were not acted upon by the council, and as a result tuberculosis and decay set in, wiping out the herd.

Contrary to this is the result of the breeding at Banff, where a herd was founded at the same time from the same source. The increase has been remarkable and the herd numbers over a hundred.

Wild Foxes in Chicago Park.

Two red foxes are roving wild in Washington Park. The animals are living in holes, slinking forth at night to trap their prey. Indiana is believed to be the former home of the invaders of civilization. Unlike other such animals found abroad in Chicago, which have been traced to former owners, these foxes are thought to know nothing of the restraint of man and to have wandered from an unsettled district of Indiana to Washington Park.

In former winters Washington Park was almost colonized by rabbits, but this winter the long-eared creatures have been comparatively scarce. It is believed the foxes have made prey of the rabbits and decimated their numbers.

Indian Baskets Tell Stories.

The making of Indian baskets is the work of the women of the tribe. Unhonored and unsung, unknown even to the daughters of her daughters, the Indian woman basket maker passes to her grave, leaving behind her a chain of woven books, each a volume in itself. The aboriginal basket maker puts into every piece of work she turns out as much of the history of her race as she knows and all of her own life, if she can express it in the set pictures or figures which have been handed down to her since basketry began.

FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT

By THADDEUS M. LAKEWOOD.

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

It might truly have been styled a military dinner, for, aside from the host and hostess and three young society buds, the entire party was made up of army officers and their wives. After the coffee had been served the stories of army life began.

Col. Hapgood had told of the stirring times in the memorable campaign with Custer; Maj. Hinton, with his usual gallantry, had declared what a blessing women were to a soldier's life, while of the younger division, Lieut. Savage, true to his branch of the service, let out the secret of how the infantry officers had, the year previous, outwitted their brethren of the cavalry at the Christmas ball. Col. Keller was one of those old-school officers who never flinched when duty called, whether it was on the field of battle or in the social arena; and his summons found him alert to respond.

"As a usual thing," he began, "there is nothing of so little use to the army in the west as a graduate of West Point. He arrives on the full tide of his glory, and is harder to break in than an Indian pony; although I say that, with a few exceptions, these same raw recruits, after a couple of years' training, turn out to be good officers and an honor to the service.

"Lieut. Dorsey—for reasons that will appear later, I have withheld his real name—was an exception to the rank and file of these youngsters, inasmuch as he was both popular and a good officer from the day he joined us. He was also a thorough gentleman, and it was not a month before he was the favorite of the fort; petted by the ladies, and admired and looked up to by the men. Strange to say, his head was not turned, and as he had the very first year distinguished himself in the field, I looked upon him as the most promising officer in my command.

"Maj. Hinton has spoken of the good influence of women on the lives of those in an army post, and I agree with him. There are, however, exceptions to every rule, and such was the case in my story, for it was a woman who spoiled a career which from the start promised so much.

"It was the third summer after Lieut. Dorsey had joined us that a young woman, whose name I shall not mention, came to visit the wife of one of the captains. I recall having read somewhere: 'Wherever youth and maiden are, there is a certainty of romance, and a chance of tragedy.' There was surely romance in this case, for at the end of the summer, when she returned to her home in the east, she took the heart of my favorite lieutenant with her. It was to my wife that he shortly afterwards confided the secret of the engagement.

"All during that winter there was not a happier or more jovial officer in the fort than he, and when in the spring his application for leave was granted, he left for the east followed by the good wishes of every officer and man in the command.

"His leave was for four months, but just three weeks from the time of his departure he again stood before me and reported for duty—a changed man.

"What occurred at the meeting no one in the command ever knew, but the man who returned to us for duty was but a poor substitute for the light-hearted favorite who had so recently left us. The ladies attempted, by every womanly expedient, to cheer him up, and to bring him out of himself; the men tried, sometimes clumsily, but always sincerely, to show their sympathy and regard. It was useless—the arrow had gone home.

"What young Dorsey wanted, above all else was, apparently, to be left alone; and when not on duty he would shut himself in his quarters and remain invisible to every one. One day, when it became necessary to bring in a party of braves who had left the reservation I put the lieutenant in command, and he departed with his first and second sergeants and 25 men.

"It was the second afternoon after their departure that the officer of the day rushed into my office and reported that a messenger had just arrived with the news that a fight had taken place, and that Lieut. Dorsey had been killed, but none of the men had been injured. At once I ordered that the ambulance be sent forward under guard, with instructions for the first sergeant to return immediately with his command.

"Upon the receipt of the news of the death I had immediately wired department headquarters that Lieut. Dorsey had been killed in an engagement that day, with no other loss of life. And upon the arrival of the remains I had at once ordered the officer in command to make his report.

"With the death of the lieutenant, the command devolved upon his first sergeant, a man well advanced in years, who worshiped the very ground upon which his lieutenant walked. It seemed only natural, then, when describing the death of his favorite officer, before the members of my staff, that at times his voice would fail him and tears dim his eyes.

"'It was just the day after we left,' he said, standing attentive, 'that we came upon their deserted camp. From signs we knew that they did not have much of the start of us, and by noon we had located them. They had taken a position among a lot of rocks, and evidently intended to fight. The lieutenant called the second sergeant and myself aside, and said: "The only way to get those rascals out is to charge them. I shall lead. Follow me. Continue the pursuit until every one is taken—alive, if possible!" We wheeled into line, but before we were fairly ready, he gave the word, and, putting the spurs into his horse, bounded away far in the lead. We went after him as fast as possible, but he distanced us, and was far in advance when they opened fire. They fired only about six shots in all, and I saw him discharge his revolver twice in return, and then fall from the saddle. When we reached him he was dead, shot through the heart. I stopped to make the examination, while the boys continued the pursuit, as ordered. They captured four, wounding one. When the men returned I sent a private to report the engagement and request the ambulance.'

"That was a gloomy afternoon, and as I sat alone in my office looking over the official report written by my clerk and handed me for correction and signature, I must acknowledge that I dwelt upon the death of my officer with feelings of the deepest sorrow. I forgot his failings of the past year, and thought only of the bright young fellow whose life had promised so much. It is no wonder that I wrote after the closing lines of the report, 'An officer who was an honor to the service, and died a soldier's death in the performance of his duty.'

"Just as I took up my pen preparatory to signing the document, my orderly entered and announced that Sergt. Hooper desired to see me. Hooper was the sergeant who had made the report of the lieutenant's death, and thinking that he might have some favor to ask, I ordered that he be shown in. He appeared, carrying under his arm a bundle wrapped in an old newspaper.

"'I know I should report to the officer of the day,' he said, 'but what I have to say is something about the lieutenant's death, and I think I should tell it to you alone.'

"'Something you have omitted from your report?' I asked, and my voice must have sounded rather stern. For to withhold facts in such a case was a grave offense.

"'Yes, sir. But what I did not relate before your staff I intended to tell you,' and the same tremor was noticeable in his voice as when he reported the death. 'The facts of the fight are just as I related them. When I bent over the lieutenant he was dead. I took off his coat, and when the boys returned we wrapped the standard about him, and went into camp to await the ambulance. The coat I have here,' and he undid the string of the bundle he carried under his arm. 'It is the only evidence I withheld from my report.'

"He unfolded the coat, and held it up without a word. As I took it from him, turning it this way and that, to get the light upon it, something fell from the inner left-hand pocket to the floor. Very reverently the sergeant stooped and gathered up—what? Simply a delicate gold rim, a few scraps of blood-stained velvet, and what seemed the fragments of the miniature portrait of a woman, painted upon porcelain. Yet though shattered beyond recognition, I think that as we viewed it silently, neither of us doubted whose picture, worn to the last over the young officer's heart, had been destroyed by the bullet that took his life.

"Replacing the remains of the portrait, I held up the coat so that I could see the hole through which the bullet had gone. The blood had long since dried, leaving its stain, but that was not all—the cloth was badly burned.

"The garment slipped from my nerveless grasp as a hundred thoughts flashed through my mind, and seizing Hooper by the shoulders I cried:

"'Your report! You said no one was near him.'

"'I told the truth, sir,' he replied, and his head was bowed for the first time.

"'My God!' I breathed, 'you don't mean—'

"There were tears in his eyes as he slowly replied: 'Yes, sir; the lieutenant shot himself.'

"It must have been some hours later when an orderly appeared and asked if the report was ready to be forwarded, as the messenger had been awaiting it for some time. Where had my thoughts been during those hours? In the past, recalling some little act or saying of a brave young soldier who had made his last march.

"I picked up the report and reread the lines I had added. Should I change them, giving the true facts and thereby cloud his memory? Or should I send it as it stood?

"Ladies and gentlemen, what would you have done in my place?"

The New Clergyman.

"Isn't he lovely! I thought his first sermon was splendid!"

"Well, I did all I could to prevent his coming. You wait and see. He isn't at all the man for us."

"Too bad, isn't it? Anyone can see at a glance that he has no manners."

"Charming, isn't he? I'm just in love with him. I think his reserve is, oh, so inspiring."

"Seems a pity he cannot preach a better sermon. Such a poor delivery."

"What a fine presence he has! And his sermons! I'm in love with them."

"You can tell he is a worker! Wonderful power!"

"Between you and me, I don't like him at all. I'm greatly surprised at the vestry getting such a man. Why, he's really quite common. And so brusque!"

"Don't you adore his sermons!"

"What wonderful eyes!"

"Not at all up to our standard. Oh dear, and I did so hope that this time we would get some one really worth while."

"I shall give up my pew."

"I've taken another pew in front. I want to be as near to him as possible."

WHAT A FORMER OREGON FARMER THINKS OF WESTERN CANADA.

Albert Nelson left Benton Co., Oregon, in Sept., 1904, for the great Canadian prairies. To quote from his letter: "I was greatly surprised to find such an immense stretch of rich virgin prairie still almost unoccupied in the very heart of North America. The splendid crops of oats, wheat, barley, potatoes and hay I beheld in the settlements made me very eager for a piece of this rich soil, and I soon located in the Goose Lake country. We have here a great stretch of the rich, deep clay loam of the Saskatchewan—a soil heavy and hard to break, but particularly well adapted for the retention of moisture and production of the bright No. 1 hard wheat, and great crops of oats, barley, flax and potatoes. I had 60 bushels of oats, weighing 44½ lb. to the bushel, per acre. Some of my neighbors had still greater yields. Wheat yielded from 20 to 30 bushels per acre. We have all done well here, and I could name many Americans who came here with means to go ahead, who have done big already. For homesteads one has to go further west, but the best prairie can be bought here for from $12.00 to $16.00 per acre. The climate is dry and healthy. This is the regular Saskatchewan fall weather—frosty nights, and bright sunny days—ideal for threshing and hauling out of wheat. The trails are dusty, as thousands of wheat teams are moving towards the elevators.

"The sight of it makes one stop and wonder what it will be in a few years when the immense prairies get under cultivation. Heavy snowfall is the exception here. Snow generally falls in December and goes off in March. It sometimes gets very cold, but the Saskatchewan farmer does not fear the cold. Winter is his season of rest. The first or second crop he builds a comfortable house for himself, and warm stables for his horses. He need not, like some, be poking about in the mud all winter attending a few beasts for a livelihood."

A Vanished Phase of New Year.

"I was very, very sad this last New Year's eve," said the impecunious man. "New Year's eve is not for the poor any more. It's for the rich now. It used to be that you could take a dollar and break into nearly every cafe in town, buy a 10-cent drink at each and paint the town, but not any more. Now you must engage a seat at a table five weeks in advance and pay all the way from $3 to $10 for the privilege of sitting in it, whether they give you a bite to eat or a drop to drink or not while you are there. Some of them do, I understand, but a lot of them don't. No. The day of the poor man's New Year's eve of wild hilarity in New York is over and gone."

Emperor's Food Regulated by Law.

Although the majority of royal personages are noted for their lavish dinner tables, there is at least one reigning monarch whose meals are of the simplest. This monarch is the emperor of China. His whole life is lived in obedience to the most stringent etiquette, and his food is all regulated for him by statute. So strict are the laws governing the imperial household that when he desires a new dish he has to pass a special decree before he can have it, and the court physicians keep a strict watch over his appetite. Should he show a special liking for any particular viand the chances are that they will persuade him not to take it, under the pretense that it may prove injurious to his health.

WHAT WIFE SAYS "GOES."

But It Sometimes Is Bad for the Painting.

When a property-owner knows nothing about paint it is bad for the property-owner, and bad for the painter. It would not be so if the property-owner would always hire a skilled painter, and then really leave everything to him. But the house-owner so often fools himself on one or the other of these things.

The skilled painter in every community has some of the most incompetent competitors that ever vexed a conscientious workman or contractor, and the incompetents get jobs generally by working cheap. In the next place, when the skilled painter is hired, they do not leave everything to him, as so many property-owners boast they do. They interfere most ignorantly and most fatally. They insist sometimes on using paint materials without investigating whether they are good or not. Or perhaps they insist on the painter's hurrying the work.

"I'm not going to have that painter's mess around my house a month," the wife says, and what wife says goes—at the cost of a lot of wasted painting money.

If the painter stays away a few days to allow the paint to thoroughly dry the owner says: "That painter's neglecting this work—guess he's side-tracking me for Jones' work. I won't stand it."

What chance does a painter have to do good work for a man who is continually nagging at him and otherwise handicapping him (without meaning it, of course)? A poor job is the inevitable result of such interference.

Poor painting costs the houseowner money—don't forget that. It might pay you to get the practical paint book, painting specifications and instrument for detecting paint adulterants, which National Lead Co. are offering under the title of House Owner's Painting Outfit No. 49. Address National Lead Co., 1902, Trinity Bldg., New York City. This company do not make paint (they leave that to the painter to do) but they make pure white lead ("Dutch Boy Painter" trademark kind) and they can tell you how to save money by securing durable painting.

Dr. J. C. Wilkinson, V. M. Higinbotham and P. B. Gaass went to Minneapolis Thursday, returning Monday. While in the city they attended the automobile show. Hig reluctantly admits that it was a big show, just a little bigger than his, but he still insists that his is next to the biggest bubble show in the state. In fact the show has already assumed such proportions that it requires an occasional special order of court to keep Hig and his friends within bounds and Mayor Duffy is contemplating the appointment of several mounted police so that there will be no more violations of the speed ordinance.

Many Red Lake county teachers were at Crookston last Friday and Saturday in attendance at the meeting of the Northwestern Minnesota Educational association. They report the meeting to have been the best in the history of the association. Fully five hundred teachers and school officers were in attendance. One of the pleasing featrues of the program was a visit to the agricultural school. The trip to the school was made by special Great Northern train. The teachers and school officers visited the classes and workshops of the agricultural students and were entertained at luncheon by Supt. and Mrs. Robertson. A declamatory contest between students of the Crookston and Moorhead high schools Friday evening resulted in a victory for the latter. Supt. L. V. Koos of the Red Lake Falls schools officiated as one of the judges in the contest.

Dan Doran, who has been manager of the Thief River Falls Lumber company's yard for many years, has resigned and next Monday he will leave for Canada where he and his family will make their future home. Mr. Doran has accepted a lucrative position with the Crown Lumber company and will be located near Calgary, Alberta. Mr. Doran has been a valuable man to the company conducting the local yard, and there is no doubt that he will make good in the new field. Mr. Doran and family have many friends here who regret that they are to leave and who will wish them much prosperity in their new home. Mr. Doran has been prominently identified with the work of the Woodman lodge during the time of his residence here and has served the lodge very efficiently as clerk. Last evening Mr. Doran's brother Woodmen gave a smoke social in his honor. As a slight token of the esteem in which he is held by the members of the order and an expression of appreciation of his efficient services as clerk, Mr. Doran was presented with a fine watch fob and charm. The Red Lake Falls concert orchestra furnished music for the occasion and a very pleasant evening was spent. In expressing regret at his leave taking, the Woodmen joined in wishing Mr. Doran all the prosperity he may be anticipating in making the change.

RED LAKE FALLS, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1909.

VOL. XXVI—NO. 27

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

RED LAKE COUNTY HAS BEEN REDISTRICTED

Big Expense Saved the State and Thief River Falls St. Paul Contingent.

Mr. Aubol Takes in More Territory—Districts Bounded by Township Lines.

A bill, H. F. 957, introduced by Representative Robertson of Argyle, provides as follows:

A bill for an act to amend Section 420 of the Revised Laws of 1905 relating to counties and county officers.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section 1. That Section 420 of the Revised Laws of 1905 be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Section 420. Each county shall be divided into as many districts, numbered consecutively, as it has members of the board. In counties divided into towns such districts shall be bounded by town or ward lines, be composed of contiguous territory and contain as nearly as practicable an equal population. Counties may be redistricted by the County Board after each state or United States census (and any county in which there is one or more townships not within any commissioner districts now established shall be redistricted in the manner above required within six months after the passage of this act.)

Now, the provisions of the bill may be most commendable, but it was like a lot of other fool bills introduced in the legislature, in that it was unnecessary to pass the bill to accomplish the results sought. The purpose of the bill was the correction of an evil supposed to exist in Red Lake county. A lot of Thief River people were down at St. Paul spending their good money and valuable time trying to get the bill through the legislature. You see, while ostensibly Mr. Robertson was the father of the bill he did not in fact bear that close relation to it. The bill was conceived in the minds of our Thief River friends and born of their selfish desire to carry off the court house while nobody aint lookin.'

It costs the state four dollars a minute to run the legislature and only Dan O'Neil and God know what it costs Thief River Falls to try run it.

The county commissioners were in session Tuesday and thought they would save the state of Minnesota and the Thief River friends the great expense incident to the attempt to pass a unnecessary law. You see, the members of the board—most of 'em—were just glad to do what the Thief Riverites wanted them to do, so they redistricted the county on township lines, just as they would be compelled to do if the bill were passed and the Thief River people ought to be happy if they are not. The resolution passed without a dissenting vote. Mr. Aubol voted "Aye," but there are those who believe that he is sorry that he said it. Mr. Shaw didn't say anything until it was all over and then he tried to say "No" loud enough and often enough to make a majority vote against the resolution, but that's against the rules of the game and don't count—no more'n a foul tip.

The Red Lake river used to be the boundary line between the Fourth district, Mr. Shaw's district, and the the Third district. Those parts of townships north of the river were taken from Mr. Shaw's district and added to Mr. Aubol's district.

And now the districts are bounded by township lines—just as they would have to be if Thief River Falls' bill became a law.

Now please don't anybody say anything nasty. What's the use?

LONG TERM FRANCHISE

Red Lake Falls Electric Light Company Asks Privileges of Streets, Alleys and Public Grounds for Period of Thirty-Five Years

3-25-1909

To the Hon. City Council,
Red Lake Falls, Minn.
Gentlemen:—

We hereby apply for a franchise according us the privilege to erect and maintain poles, wires, and other appliances for electric power and light purposes in the streets, alleys and public grounds of this city for a period of 35 years.

Our reason for making this application is that nothing can be done in the establishment of industries of any kind, for which the transmission of current will be required, nor can permanent contracts be entered into for the furnishing of current without such a franchise extending over a period of years as above specified.

We therefore respectfully request that the City Council place this matter before the voters of this city, as early as may be convenient.

Respectfully,
Red Lake Falls Electric Light Company.
By S. M. Sivertson.

The Red Lake Falls Electric Light company has made formal application to the city council for a franchise according the company the privilege of the use of the streets, alleys and public grounds of the city for the erection of poles, wires and other appliances for electric power and light purposes for a period of thirty-five years.

The request is a little unusual because of the length of time for which the franchise is requested, but the company is entitled to a fair statement of its case and the members of the council and the voters of the city should consider the matter thoughtfully before rejecting the proposition or before favorable action is taken.

The franchise asked for is not an exclusive one, such as the company is now operating under and if granted would bind the city to nothing save that the company would have the use of the city's streets, alleys and public grounds for the number of years stated. Franchises could be granted to any number of companies after four years from next fall when the franchise recently granted will expire. The city would not be bound to take any lights, more than are now contracted for or may be contracted for from time to time.

The object of the company in seeking this franchise is quite different from that which occasioned the request for and granting of the franchise under which the company is now operating. In making plans for the rebuilding of the mill, the Red Lake Falls Milling company find that it would be a big advantage to have the mill located "up town" where railroad facilities are better and where the local grain business can be handled more economically. During the years that the company has been doing business it has been necessary to pay farmers a premium of two cents per bushel for hauling grain down to the mill. Besides that the company has maintained an uptown elevator at no small expense and a large amount of money has been expended in other expenses incident to the inconvenience of having the mill located outside of the city.

Nothing would please the people of Red Lake Falls more than to know that the mill is to be rebuilt and that it is to be located in the city. The erection of the mill up town and the transmission of power would mean all day electric service for the city and possibly the establishment of other industries. In fact there is greater prospect of satisfactory developements along this line than may be generally understood, though The Gazette cannot speak authoritively of that at this time.

The sincerity of purpose of the officers of the company in making the application for the franchise is not questioned, but The Gazette believes that the members of the council will and should expect a statement a little more definite than that made in the formal request. The fact that the company would expect to be able to make better disposal of electric power under such a franchise is scarcely adequate consideration for the granting of a thirty-five year franchise. But with the assurance that the mill is to be built as a consideration for the granting of the franchise, the proposition is a fair one worthy of the serious and thoughtful consideration of the members of the city council and the voters of the city.

Kyinlaug's Bad Habit

Prince Albert, Feb. 11, 1909—The police are looking for Dedrick Kvinlaug, who left home a week ago threatening to commit suicide. He left his wife and three small children with very little provisions, and the mother gave birth to the fourth child on Sunday. Friends are taking care of the deserted family.

The above item, taken from a Prince Albert newspaper, tells of a distressing incident in which the principals as former residents of Fosston and well remembered by many here. It is also remembered that Kvinlaug made a similar disappearance from Wylie, two years ago, leaving a family and numerous creditors behind at that time.

He has apparently formed an exceedingly bad habit.—Fosston Thirteen Towns.

The Value of Advertising.

Northfield News: A duck which has faithfully stuck to business during the summer and laid several dozen large, fawn colored eggs complained that she was not appreciated. "See that hen over there?" said the duck. "She hasn't laid so many eggs as I have, nor so big, but she has books written about her and verses composed in her honor, while nobody is saying a word about me." "The trouble with you is," said a wise buff Leghorn cock that was standing near, "that you don't tell the public what you have done. You lay an egg and waddle off without saying a word, while that sister of mine never lays one without letting everybody in the neighborhood know it. If you want to cut any ice in this community you must learn to advertise."

FIRE AT DUGDALE LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

The City Hall and Store of Herman Camp Burned—Mr. Camp Had Narrow Escape

Loss of $15,000, Insurance for About Half of Value—Little Left of Town

Early Friday morning a fire at Dugdale totally destroyed the general store of Herman P. Camp and the town hall adjoining entailing a loss of about $15,000 on which there was insurance of $7,000 on the stcok of Mr. Camp and $700 on the town hall.

The most fortunate feature of the fire was that Mr. Camp who roomed over the store barely escaped with his life, the flames enveloping the room before he was awakened.

The fire is supposed to have originated in the attic of the store, but this will never be known to a certainty. There was a dance in the hall that evening but the people had all reached their homes and were fast asleep when the alarm was given.

Mr. Camp had a big stock and the insurance will not cover the loss.

The destruction of these two buildings very nearly wiped out the town as it is only a small station. The Great Northern about two years ago moved the depot to Tilden about a mile west of Dugdale and since then this little town has been handicapped.

It is believed that Mr. Camp will rebuild, though he has not yet decided what he will do. He was doing a fine business and had no competition.

Asks Questions.

Alma (Kan.) Enterprise: The third assistant postmaster general has sent out another batch of advertising circulars to the postmaster with the instructions to put them into the patrons boxes, advertising the government envelopes which are printed for nothing in competition with the country printing offices. This circular says "anyone who uses government stamped envelopes is aiding the department in improveing the service." Why is this so, Mr. Third Assistant, any more than when they buy stamps? How much does the department make in clear profit when a patron buys of Uncle Sam 500 envelopes printed for 62 cents? Do you also include in their cost the millions of four-page advertising letters you sent out last week telling the people to buy them? And Congressman Miller has not introduced a bill to stop the practice, either.

TRUSTEES APPOINTED.

O. F. Post, St. Hilaire Merchant, Financially Embarrassed.

O. F. Post decided last week that he could best protect his business interests and the interests of his creditors by the appointment of a trustee. He decided to appoint W. T. Carlisle, of the firm of Finch, Winslow & Carlisle of Crookston, and Mr. Carlisle, through his representative, Mr. A. H. Pitkin, took charge of the business Monday.

It is the intention of Mr. Carlisle to restock the store and carry a full and complete line of goods. The store will be run under his management for an indefinite period or until he can, if possible, pay up the creditors and again turn it over to Mr. Post, who will continue at the store.

Mr. A. H. Pitkin, who will represent the trustee here, has had an extensive experience in this line. He informs us that as soon as an inventory is taken it is probable that a big sale will take place.

The many friends of Mr. Post will regret to learn of his embarrassment and all will hope that he will soon be in shape to again take charge.—Spectator.

ROCK PILE AT HUOT

Farmers Have Delivered 5000 Tons To be Used in Construction of Dam.

The proposed water power improvement on the Red Lake River near Huot postoffice in Louisville township, seven miles west of this city, is proving a bonanza to the farmers in that vicinity who are supplying the rock for the dam.

The farmers delivered 5000 tons the past winter for which they were paid $3000, a very neat sum, and in addition much land was rid of rocks and made more valuable.

With the stone secured the past winter there is about one-fourth of the total amount needed for the dam now on the ground.

The old fashioned way of dosing a weak stomach, or stimulating the heart or kidneys is all wrong. Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. This is why his prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed entirely to the cause of these ailments, the weak inside or controlling nerves. It isn't so difficult, says Dr. Shoop, to strengthen a weak stomach, heart or kidneys, if one goes at it correctly. Each inside organ has its controliing nerve. When these nerves fail then those organs must surely falter. These vital truths are leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Test it a few days and see! Improvement will promptly and surely follow. Sold by all dealers.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

REVIEW OF THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE STATE LEGISLATORS FOR THE WEEK

St. Paul, March 18.—The tonnage tax bill, introduced by Representative Bjorge, was passed in the house yesterday after a debate lasting from 1:30 in the afternoon until 7 o'clock in the evening. The members listened attentively to the arguments for and against the bill, which is something unusual when long speeches are made, and when the vote was taken every member was present except one. The vote on the bill stood 61 to 57, just one more than needed to pass the measure. The bill in its present form classifies mines into two classes: Those which produce less than 20,000 tons during the season are left to be taxed on the old basis, while those which produce more are taxed 5 cents a ton on ore with 59 or more per cent of iron, 4 cents a ton for ore with 54 to 58 per cent of iron, 3 cents a ton on ore with 49 to 53 per cent of iron, and 2 cents a ton on ore with less than 49 per cent of iron. This is for state purposes and is to be divided between the estate school funds and the general revenue funds. The mines are to be taxed on the ad valorem basis, as at present, for local purposes.

The so-called club bill, authorizing social clubs to sell liquor without a license, passed the house yesterday. The bill got 60 votes and could not pass with less.

The Greene boxing bill permitting six-round boxing bouts in St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth was passed by the house.

A tax of 10 per cent on the income from real estate mortgages is proposed in a bill by Representative Thayer.

The bill vesting attorneys at law with the powers of notaries public was indefinitely postponed in the house on recommendation of the committee on general legislation.

A bill prohibiting hunters from entering private land, except with the permission of the owner, was introduced by Representative McGrath.

In the Senate.

State aid for tubercular patients is contemplated in a bill by Senator Nelson. He would have a tax of one-tenth of a mill levied annually for this aid. The state board of health may specify the rules to be complied with.

Representatives of the grain interests of North Dakota are to be invited to sit with the Minnesota board of grain appeals, according to a joint resolution adopted by the senate yesterday.

Senator Nelson introduced a bill for a constitutional amendment to be submitted to the people providing for an annual tax levy of one-tenth of a mill for forestry purposes. It is intended that land more suitable for forestry purposes is to be purchased by the state for reforestation.

Other bills introduced were:

Prohibiting pawnbrokers receiving goods from minors; prescribing regulation to prevent collisions on lakes and rivers; authorizing refund of tax certificates; providing for appeal to tax commission from county boards of abatement; allowing school boards to establish medical inspection in schools of big cities; increasing penalty for defamatory circulars; to make uniform the law of warehouse receipts; to promote building of public highways.

St. Paul, March 19.—Cass Lake's normal school bill passed the senate yesterday without a single vote to spare. The count was 32 to 25. Senator Sageng made the principal speech against the bill. He accused the managers of the Cass Lake campaign of bartering votes on other projects in return for aid on the normal school bill. He declared that the proposed site was undesirable, and read from a report on the reservoirs showing that they back water up at times to the edge of the land picked as the normal school site, making a bad swampy place.

The Hackney bill for a correspondence school of agriculture was placed on general orders in the senate, the majority report of the committee recommending the bill being accepted after short debate.

The senate killed a bill for tuberculin tested dairy products, and the house bill relating to semi-monthly payment of wages, in addition to several minor bills.

A number of unimportant bills were introduced.

The following bills were passed:

Denfining banks and savings banks; relating to damage caused by fire from a locomotive; requiring construction of culvert when necessary to reach lands abutting public roads; requiring certain vegetables and grains to be sold by the pound; relating to contracts for maintenance of public road; legalizing mortgages given by guardians for wards; relating to service of writ of mandamus; relating to bonds of public contractors; relating to writs of certiorari; relating to recording of marriage certificates; regulating proceedings against delinquent financial corporations; relating to corporations; amending law relating to demand notes.

In the House.

The Rowe packing plant bill was yesterday made a special order in the house for next Thursday. Representative Lennon made a motion to take the bill from general orders and indefinitely postpone it, but withdrew his motion, and instead had the bill made a special order for Thursday.

The house yesterday began consideration of the employers' liability bill drafted by the special committee. After some discussion a motion was made to continue the special order until next Tuesday.

The bills recommended to pass included two bills for constitutional amendments to promote reforestation; a bill regulating the provisions to be contained in accident insurance policies; a bill permitting counties to spend money to advertise their resources; Robertson's bill providing that the wholesaler and not the retailer shall be prosecuted for violations of the food laws; McKenzie's bill to prevent killing of wild animals on state forest reserves; Spooner's bill limiting telegraph tolls to 25 cents for ten words within the state; Opsahl's dynamite bill and Putnam's bill repealing the horse thief and tree planting bounties.

St. Paul, March 20. — Vindications for S. W. Leavett and the other members of the board of control who were concerned in the famous coal rebate deals reported by the public examiner is continued in both the majority and minority report which the public accounts and expenditures committee presented to the house yesterday. Both reports agree that in asking for and accepting the rebate from the Northwestern Fuel company the members of the board acted in good faith and with the intention of saving money for the state. Both agree that the practice of accepting rebates for the state is inadvisable. This practice of rebating has been discontinued, however. The reports differ in that the majority report holds that the board was acting within the law, while the minority report says that "in view of the requirement of the law, that all the contracts of the board shall be in writing, that the board shall make rules in regard to supplies and contracts so as to insure competition and publicity, and prohibiting the taking of gifts or gratuities from dealers in supplies, it is the opinion of the undersigned that such a system of rebating on the part of state officials is not permissable under the state laws."

The majority report finds that in several matters in which the public examiner reported that the state had lost money, he had not taken into consideration differences in quality or other conditions.

The house passed the following bills:

Specifying the compensation to be paid members of county boards of education for unorganized territory; to fix the time within which notice or claim for loss, injury or damage to shipments of live stock in transit may be presented to common carriers thereof; proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing a tax for reforestation; regulating the conditions and provisions to be contained in policies of health or accident insurance issued in this state; relating to fees of insurance companies; relating to the suppression of dangerous, contagious and infectious diseases of domestic animals; to authorize county boards to appropriate and expend money for the purpose of advertising and exploiting the natural resources of their county to induce immigration thereto; to prevent the killing of wild animals or birds upon the Minnesota state forest reserve lands and parks and within national forests; relating to the taxation of express companies; regulating charges of telegraph companies; to appropriate money for the purpose of purchase of dynamite or similar explosive, with necessary fuse and caps, and to provide for the sale thereof in the development for agricultural purposes of lands within this state; repealing tree planting and horse thief bounties; providing two months closed season for Mississippi river fishing; prohibiting catching of rabbits with ferrets.

In the Senate.

The senate yesterday passed the "pork barrel" bill, appropriating $300,000 for roads and bridges over the state. This will be followed by a bill dividing the money among the counties and designating where and by whom the money shall be expended. [illegible] barrel this year is $100,000 larger than two years ago.

Ten cents penalty for not buying a ticket before the train starts is provided in a bill introduced by Senator Nelson. It is an amendment to the 2-cent rate law.

The following bills were passed:

Repealing the law establishing a stallion registration board; validating certain bonds purchased by state board of investment; authorizing cities of more than 50,000 to issue bonds for bridge across stream in the city; amending election law to adapt it to voting machines; relating to carnal knowledge of children; legalize collection of fees by probate court; permitting tax commission to rebate taxes; punishing issuance of false statements to obtain credit; relating to commitment to the state training school; licensing dining cars to sell liquor; relating to taxation of freight line companies; relating to refundment of money paid at tax sale when property is exempt from taxation; relating to special levy for state school fund; validating expenditures for observance of Memorial day; amending section 3610, Revised Laws of 1905; increasing grounds of divorce from men in other state prisons; relating to bonds of public contractors; authorizing bonds for public school grounds; relating to the organization of cities.

St. Paul, March 23.—A bill was introduced in the house yesterday by Representative Campbell providing for a commission to inquire into the subject of workingmen's compensation for injuries and to report a bill to the next legislature. The commission is to be composed of three members, who are to serve without compensation. Mr. Campbell introduced another bill, requiring casualty and indemnity companies to furnish information regarding accidents, giving detailed reports, classifying causes and conditions of accidents, compensation received and the like. A third bill by the same author requires all physicians and surgeons, employers and employes to report all accidents to the state labor bureau and give complete information concerning them.

A joint resolution was offered by Representative Lennon for a joint committee to confer with railroad officials regarding the commodity freight rates which are being tested in the courts and report a bill which might settle the litigation. The resolution went over under notice of debate.

The senate was not in session yesterday.

Own a Clock or Go Timeless.

A petition is being circulated in Crafton requesting the school board to silence the bell on the Second ward schoolhouse.

The bell, attached to the clock, peals out the hours and the half hours. Residents near the building say it disturbs their sleep.

The petition asserts the time for town clocks has passed and that any one too poor to buy a clock for his home has no need to know the time.

Will Join Dwarf Colony.

Waseca, Minn., March 21. — Don Ward, a midget twenty years of age, whose home was in this city, stopped off here to visit relatives while on his way from Missoula, Mont., to Paris. Mr. Ward has traveled extensively through the Northwest and is now engaged to join a company of midgets gathered from all parts of the world, who will form a colony near Paris and co-operate in show work.

FIND DEAD MAN IN HOTEL ROOM.

St. Paul, March 21.—D. W. Albright, about forty years old, a resident of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was found dead in bed in Room 103 at the Merchants hotel yesterday.

Coroner Miller has taken charge of the body, but has not fully determined whether it is a case of suicide or a natural death. He is inclined to the latter belief, but will conduct an autopsy to decide.

WOLF ATTACKS BOY NEAR TOWN

Shenandoah, Iowa, March 21.—The four-year-old son of C. A. Carlson of this place was attacked by a wolf just outside of town yesterday, and the animal was only prevented from devouring him by the promptness of neighbors in coming to the rescue.

The child was returning home from school at noon, when the wolf leaped on him from the side of the road.

The child's body was terribly lacerated by the animal's teeth.

Whipping Dead Horses.

It is often more difficult to revive a decaying business than to build a successful new one. A reputation may be a valuable asset; equally, it may be a fatal handicap. I have frequently referred to the decline in the consumption of intoxicating liquors in Norway. An investigator has recently prepared a table, showing that the decline has been in progress for several generations. Records have been taken of the amount of liquor used since 1833, and it seems to be a fact that the average individual drinks five times as little liquor today as the average individual seventy-five years ago. In 1833 it is claimed that the average amount of liquor drunk per year by each individual was sixteen liters; now it is a trifle over three liters.

The new Bergen theater was formally opened to the public February 19, and the occasion will be remembered as one of the big events in the history of the city. King Haakon was present, arriving by rail from the capital in the morning. He alighted from the train at Fjosanger, where he was met by former Premier Michelsen and a host of cheering subjects. During the day he visited the most interesting places in the city, escorted by Michelsen and other notables. He was in excellent humor, seemed to enjoy his visit greatly. He was unassuming and democratic in his manner, walking about the streets like an ordinary citizen, pleasantly exchanging greetings with the people. When he entered the theater, the audience rose and sang "Ja, vi elsker dette Landet," The popular play, "Erasmus Montanus," was presented, scene succeeding scene with precision, all the actors playing their roles without a hitch. The king went upon the stage between two of the acts and chatted with the actors, and on leaving the theater, he awakened enthusiasm by expressing his interest in the future of the Bergen stage.

The new Bergen theater is a beautiful playhouse, second only to the National theater at Christiania. The drama has always flourished at Bergen, since Ole Bull lent his interest to it over half a century ago.

Johan Andersson of Torshalla, a man fifty-seven years of age, died last month as a result of cold and starvation. He had lived for many years with his father, Lars Andersson, and both were so miserly as to deny themselves the very necessities of life, although possessing a fortune of 7,000 crowns. But for the timely discovery of the neighbors both men would have succumbed, as they were already helpless when found, and the son was so far weakened that heart failure came to put an end to his miserable existence.

DENMARK.

According to reports from Copenhagen, the bill appropriating 43,000,000 crowns for the national defense, in accordance with the plans of the commission which has been studying the subject for months and years, stands but little show of passage. As was to be expected, the members of the social democratic party are solidly arrayed against the proposed measure; they want disarmament and everlasting peace. The radical lefts are also against the measure, largely because they like to be in opposition, but especially because they think the sum asked for is entirely too large. Some refuse to vote a penny; others are willing to appropriate four or five million crowns, and a very few of these radicals would go as high as fifteen million crowns, but 43,000,000 is entirely out of the question.

The party of the right is heartily in favor of the bill, but the reform party is hopelessly divided. Indeed, it looks as if this question will cause a permanent split in this great party, and lead to new party alignments.

The national taxes collected from the people during the years 1905-6 and 1906-7 amounted to 75,050,000 crowns, and the local taxes during the same period aggregated the sum of 46,700,000 crowns—making a grand total of 122,000,000 crowns. It is estimated that the aggregate income of the people of Denmark during the same period was 1,000,000,000 crowns; hence the taxes were equal to 12 per cent of the people's earnings. It is therefore apparent that it is expensive to live in Denmark, but the taxes were still higher in former times, a thought which may console the Danish people somewhat.

All Danish women over twenty-five years of age will, after this date, have the right to vote and come forward as candidates in the elections for the Copenhagen municipal council. The women, however, display no enthusiasm.

There are forty-two seats, and the socialists, the most powerful and best organized of the parties, have only succeeded in finding seven women candidates, of whom two have resigned on grounds, it is alleged, of personal jealousy. One says that she has developed a weakness of the heart, and the second that her housewifely duties are too exacting to permit her to enter politics.

The number of men out of employment still is increasing, and now includes more than 25 per cent of the country's working classes. The last winter has been the worst in many years, preventing building operations and closing many of the harbors. The Scandinavian-American liners are crowded with emigrants.

Milly of the "Golden Hope"

:: BY WILLIAM WALLACE COOK ::

THERE'S not a miner in camp but remembers how Milly took her father's buckboard, with Lightning and Dynamite at the pole, and covered the eighteen miles to Phoenix in two hours for the purpose of meeting the new super and bringing him out to the Golden Hope mine. By Jupiter, I can see the girl yet as she shot over the hill yonder, the bronchos in the air most of the time and touching ground only when necessary. The brim of Milly's cowboy hat was blown up against the crown, her red hair was flying out behind her, and every now and then she'd give a shout: "Show your paces, Lightning! Dynamite, what's the matter with you? Two hours to make the train and the grass growing under your feet!" Then swish, larrup, swish! right and left she would slap the whip and for all of half a minute the bronchos never touched ground at all.

Graham, Milly's father, was an amalgamator on the night shift in the mill and Mr. Crosby had asked him to go for the super, but Graham was suffering from rheumatism that morning and Milly insisted on taking the work off her father's hands. Graham was also to bring out a hundred pounds of giant powder, a box of caps and a carboy of sulphuric acid, but Milly was told to let this truck alone and confine herself to the transportation of the new super.

"All right," she had said, but the first thing she did when she reached town was to load up with the blasting and cyaniding material. The train was three hours late, so she had plenty of time to do that and to give the bronks a rest—which they didn't need, by the way, being as full of the old Harry when they got into Phoenix as they were when they left the camp.

Milly didn't know Larry from Adam and when the train came in she had to use her woman's wit and accost the most likely looking of the arriving passengers. She picked out a slender man with a smooth white face and a pair of "nose-grabber" glasses—the very last man I would have selected if I had been in her place.

"Mr. McKay?" she asked, with one of those pretty smiles which used to make even my heart flutter, old as it is.

Larry was startled for a minute; then he acknowledged his identity and Milly explained. Larry afterwards told me that right there was where he began to enjoy the situation.

Milly asked him how many trunks he had and he informed her that he wasn't fortunate enough to have any, but that everything he had in the world was in a little two-by-four grip which he was carrying.

He tossed the grip into the rear of the buckboard, between the carbby of acid and the box of powder, and climbed to the seat. Milly took the lines and the bronchos started out of Phoenix just as they had started out of camp. Before they had crossed the bridge over the town ditch a man from Mason & Whipple's overhauled them, his horse just a-smoking.

"Hold up!" he yelled.

Milly drew rein and the man hove alongside and told her she would have to be careful of the powder as it was the last they had and had been on hand so long it had become crystalized.

Now a stick of crystalized giant powder will go off if you look at it crossways, or it will allow itself to be pounded with a hammer and burned, just as it happens to take a notion. There's no depending on the stuff and miners, as a rule, refuse to work with it.

"Much obliged," said Milly with a laugh; "I'll be careful."

Then, just to try the super's nerve, she let the bronchos out once more and, while they went bounding over the rough road, watched her companion out of the corners of her eyes.

Larry, to all appearances, was enjoying the ride and taking in the scenery with ecstatic interest.

"Do you object to tobacco smoke, Miss Graham?" he calmly inquired.

"Object?" returned Milly, her eyes dancing. "Why, if you had a cigarette, I'd join you."

That ought to have surprised McKay, but it didn't seem to.

"How lucky!" he exclaimed, his face brightening. "I've got a package of gold tips and we'll smoke together. Shall I drive while you light up?"

"Oh, no, it won't be necessary!" and Milly slipped an arm through the loop in the lines and immediately, as I happen to know, lighted and smoked her first cigarette. McKay declared that she lighted it in the strong wind with all the skill of a veteran smoker and burned it resolutely clear to the gold band.

I afterwards asked Milly why she did it.

"I don't know," she said, laughingly; "I suppose I just wanted to show the new super what an awful harum-scarum girl I was."

As they pounded along, smoking and watching the landscape dash by, McKay casually inquired as to the amount of powder they had aboard.

"A hundred pounds," said Milly, "and a box of caps and a carboy of sulphuric acid."

"If the powder let go," commented Larry, "the acid would eat up the remains of the outfit if there happened to be any. It seems to me that off horse is holding back. Can't you touch him up a little?"

Lightning was not holding back by any means, but nevertheless Milly "touched him up" and the crazy old buckboard lurched and swayed and buck-jumped in its efforts to hold together and keep up with the horses. The girl, not to be outdone by the new super in a display of reckless courage, steered always for the roughest part of the road.

As a result it was not long before one of the front wheels collided with a rock that was too big for it to climb. A jolt followed that threw the travelers into the road, the whiffletree gave way, the neck yoke slipped off the pole and the bronks went on without the buckboard.

Larry was up first and he hurried to Milly, who was lying beside the trail with a very white face, more frightened at the manner in which her escapade was turning out than she cared to admit.

"Are you hurt?" cried Larry.

"Not a bit," answered Milly, getting up slowly, "but I was afraid that you might be. It was very foolish of me to drive like that."

"It's my fault," declared Larry. "If it hadn't been for me this wouldn't have happened."

"It's kind of you to shoulder the blame," said Milly, picking up the glasses and presenting them to him, "but I won't have it that way. Here we are, right in the desert, twelve miles from Phoenix and six from camp. How are you at walking?"

"Good," replied Larry, "but let's not talk of walking just yet. The buckboard doesn't seem to be in very bad shape, and if we can catch the horses—"

"Might as well try to catch a couple of jackrabbits," broke in Milly; "they went through that gap in the mountain like a streak."

"Something may have happened in the gap," persisted Larry. "At any rate, before we give up trying to haul this freight into camp let's go over there and see what the situation is."

So they started on foot for the gap and had got about half way to it when there came a roar like that from a hundred cannons and the very ground shook beneath their feet. Dazed, they could do nothing for a moment but stand and look at each other; then they shifted their eyes back along the trail and saw that the buckboard and its freight had vanished completely. Where it had stood there was now a hole of about the dimensions of a cellar for a good sized house.

"What could have caused that?" gasped Milly.

"It's hard to tell," replied McKay; "no one can even guess what crystalized giant powder is going to do. I noticed, though, that the bottom of the buckboard was pushed back on the front axle. If the box dropped on the road, the powder might have jarred in such a way that it exploded. Or the caps might have exploded and set off the powder."

"Anyway," said Milly, with a nervous little shudder, "it's done, and it's a lesson for me that I shall never forget. The buckboard's gone, the powder, the caps and the carboy of acid—"

"And my grip," added Larry, ruefully.

"With all you've got in the world," said Milly.

Their eyes met and something in the situation caused them to laugh.

"What of it?" cried Larry. "We're saved, let us not forget that. Come! We'll set out for camp and find the horses if we can."

Turning their faces towards the hills they plodded on under the hot sun and through the white dust. Beyond the gap they found that a little good fortune had fallen to their lot, for the horses had swerved from the trail and tried to pass a mosquito tree, one going on either side. The strong neck-yoke caught each animal across the breast and threw it, thus enabling a Mexican woodhauler, who happened to be passing, to catch them.

An hour later Milly and the new super came into camp riding Lightning and Dynamite.

The details of the affair got out and for many a day formed the staple topic among the miners and mill men. No one could have convinced the Golden Hope boys that Milly had done wrong and indignation was general when the old man said that Graham would have to pay for the powder, the caps and the carboy of acid. But Larry showed that he knew how to do the handsome thing and came forward and paid the entire bill out of his own pocket.

That was the way the acquaintance between Milly and Larry began, and and it was a pretty warm starter I think you will have to admit. Still, in spite of the courage Larry had displayed, and in spite of his handsome face, and engaging manner and general popularity, Milly did not seem to receive his advances in a very friendly spirit. A change came over the girl, a change that could not escape the most careless observer.

Formerly she was here, there and everywheare about the camp, sometimes down in the mine where her brother was employed and often in the mill with her father, helping about the plates and learning the ins and outs of the work. But now her whole manner was different. Her gay, careless laugh was never heard and she suddenly developed a love for seclusion and would wander off into the hills and remain for hours, sometimes bringing back with her an armful of yellow poppies. I noticed, too, that some of the poppies usually found their way to the super's desk in the office, though how they got there was a mystery to the super as well as to everybody else.

Many a time while I have been attending to my batteries in the mill, I have seen Larry seated at a window and look over the flat towards Graham's adobe house. If his face lighted up with a smile, and if he went away humming or whistling, I very well knew that he had caught a glimpse of Milly. I'm not such a confirmed old Hassayamper that I can't read the first chapter of the old, old story when I see it written in a man's face as plainly as it was in Larry McKay's and as I knew the super to be every inch a man, I was eager to hurry over the intervening pages and see if the end did not read like the end of the fairy stories that used to delight me when a boy—"And they lived happily together ever afterwards."

For four months or more affairs were in a very tantalizing condition for McKay, but at the end of that time an event happened which brought about a crisis. Something was wrong in the mill, and in order to understand how the old man found it out, a brief explanation of our methods at the Golden Hope mill will not be out of order.

We had four five-stamp batteries in the mill and were running night and day on what is known as free-milling ore—that is, ore which yields its gold readily to the mill plates. I had care of two of the batteries and was on the night shift with Graham. Our ore is always tested before it goes into the hoppers, the ore-feeder throwing aside every tenth shoveful. From the ore thrown aside the assayer would "quarter down" a sample, assay it and find out how the ore aveaged for each day's run. Samples of the tailings as they left the plates were also taken and assayed. The difference, therefore, between the value of the ore as it went into the hoppers, and the value of the tailings in the tailings-trough, should show the amount caught by the quicksilver.

For instance, at the time of the trouble in the mill, our ore was running $10.97 per ton as it passed through the crushe and there was just 97c value in the tailings. That meant that $10 worth of yellow metal to the tone had been extracted. Thirty tons of ore went through the mill every twenty-four hours, which meant that $300 had been left on the plates, or $4,200 every two weeks when a clean-up was made.

Four months after Larry McKay took hold at the mine the bullion brought out of the clean-up showed a value of only $2,300, the other $2,000 having hysteriously vanished.

As soon as Luke Crosby got his statement back from the San Francisco mine he and the super had a long talk in the office. The result of that talk was that Larry began spending a good deal of his time about the mill while the night shift was at work. Not a whisper had got around among the boys, but seeing the super strolling about under the ore-loft at all hours of the night led me to guess that something was wrong.

The third night after McKay began his vigils, Graham failed to respond when the whistle blew for the night shift: In his place came Milly, and met the super in the aisle between Graham's two batteries.

"Father's rheumatism is bad tonight," she explained, "and I'm going to work in his place."

Each of the twenty stamps was falling at the rate of ninety-eight drops to the minute, so you perhaps can imagine what a roar there was in the mill and the difficulties attending any attempt at conversation. Milly had to repeat her words two or three times and when Larry finally caught them he stepped back, looked at her narrowly and shook his head. Milly's answer was a decided nod. When she had given it she hurried around the end of battery No. 1 and up the stairs to the ore loft, the super following.

From where I stood I could look up into the loft and I saw Milly halt before five of the dancing stems, catch the block of wood hanging near, and "hang up" battery No. 2 from the first stem to the last, all as nice as you please and without a break. And it's something of a trick to hang up a battery, I'd have you know.

Astonishment was written all over Larry's face. Milly smiled at him, gave her head a toss, ran down stairs again, got the whiskbrom and the bttle of "quick" and began dressing down the plate. The super leaned against one of the battery timbers for a few minutes, watching her; then, rather moodily, as I thought, turned and passed into the dark regions back of the battery boxes.

I can't begin to tell you how well Milly tok care of these two batteries—up to midnight. She had learned the trick from her father and had proved an apt student in that as in other things.

When the hour of twelve drew near everything was running smoothly and Milly placed a chair in the aisle between the plates and seated herself, her face towards the back of the mill. From my side of the big building I was watching Milly and noticing how her head, whose clustering tresses resembled red gold under the lamp light, bowed further and further forward.

"Let her sleep," thought I; "if anything gets the matter with Graham's batteries, I'll slip over and fix things up myself."

Even as I stood looking at the girl, however, I saw her lithe form straighten as in a flash. The next moment she had sprung up with a wild scream and had darted into the dark shadows beneath the ore loft.

The scream had echoed shrilly above the pounding of the stamps, and I sprang clear over the plate of Battery Three and ran toward Milly, who, as I could make out, had caught hold of some one back of the heavy beams.

Before I could gain the girl's side she was hurled backward into the light again.

Once more she screamed, and in a twinkling McKay appeared.

Not knowing what had gone amiss, the engineer shut off the steam and the dead silence that reigned in the mill was broken by a wild Spanish oaths.

Simultaneously with the oath a Mexican sprang into sight, a knife in his right hand and in his left a jingling object whose nature I had no time just then to examine into.

"He's the thief!" shouted McKay. "Careful that he doesn't get past you, Simms! Miss Graham, go to the engine room, quick! Watch out for her, Simms!"

Caught red-handed, the Mexican—whom I now recognized as the crusher man—stood like a coyote at bay, ready for any deed, however desperate.

Warily McKay and I closed in on the fellow. First he started for me, then jumped back and let drive with his knife straight at McKay. The super dodged, struck out with his fist and slipped on the greasy floor, his blow falling short.

That was the Mexican's opportunity. It would have been utterly impossible for me to reach him in time to knock aside the hand that held the knife poised over McKay's breast. Milly, however, was closer than I; for, instead of going to the engine room as ordered, she had passed around the back of No. 1 battery and was advancing upon the scene from the darkness under the ore loft.

Quicker than it takes to tell of it she threw herself forward and caught the Mexican's uplifted arm. The scoundrel turned upon her, the knife flashed, fell and Milly sank to her knees, one hand pressed to her bosom and reddening with a flow of blood.

A cry of insane fury burst from McKay, and he hurled himself upon the man and beat him to the floor. Meanwhile I had caught Milly and was supporting her.

"Oh, Milly, Milly," groaned McKay, turning and catching her out of my arms, "you are not badly hurt? Tell me, tell me!"

"Not seriously," she gasped; "get me to the house, please."

McKay had a strength that belied his appearance and he gathered Milly up in his arms and bore her out of the mill, while I gave my attention to the Mexican.

The man was unconscious, and the engineer and I bound him and carried him to the engine room. Then I went back and secured the jingling object which the fellow had been carrying at the time Milly had detected his working at the rear of the battery box. It was a long wire, hooked at the ends and strung with squares of copper, each square thickly crusted with a coat of amalgam.

As we quickly discovered there were four of these contrivances, one for each battery. During the confusion at the hour when the day shift was going off and the night shift coming on, the Mexican would steal down, and hang his wires in the boxes, where the silvered squares of copper would catch the richest gold. After the wires had been in place several hours, he would sneak down again, slip them out, wrap his coat about them and take them away with him at daylight.

It was a clever swindle, and a daring one, and, of course, it proved conclusively where the missing gold had gone. A search of the Mexican's quarters revealed a ball of squeezed amalgam as big as a cocoanut, which, after retoting and melting, yielded a value of $2,500. The fellow was tried, convicted and went to Yuma for a good long term.

Milly's wound was serious, but, of course, she got well; and, of course, she married Larry McKay. Such a time as we had in camp on that day has never been seen here before or since. McKay got a girl to be proud of, and Milly got a man who—but then I've already told you what I thought of Larry.

The two of them are away in the East somewhere on their honeymoon, and whenever Graham writes he has a standing order to give them my "best."

GETS DIVORCE COURT DECREE

MRS. GEORGE GUY CHETWYND

Formerly Miss Rosalind Secor of New York, who has won a decree of conjugal rights in a London divorce court.

Circumstantial Evidence.

The late A. J. Cassatt, at a dinner at the Philadelphia Country club, was asked his opinion of the fashion of women riding horseback astride.

"I don't altogether favor it," said Mr. Cassatt. "It sometimes leads to confusion.

"I was driving one afternoon on Lancaster pike when a rider was thrown violently from a spirited bay horse. Luckily, the accident happened in front of a pharmacy. The proprietor ran forth with his clerk. He propped up the head of the unconscious rider, and, seeing a gold cigarette case lying on the ground, he took it up and read, 'P. S. Browne, 1838 Walnut street.'

"'Jack!' he shouted to his errand boy, 'telephone to Mrs. Browne, 1838 Walnut street, that her husband—'

"But just then a tiny gold hand mirror with a powder puff attachment fell from the rider's trouser pocket and the pharmacist called:

"'Jack, I mean telephone Mr. Browne that Mrs. Browne has fallen—'

"But at this point the clerk, who had been burning a feather under the rider's nose, tickled her lips with it, and she smiled and murmured, 'Jim.'

"And then the pharmacist shouted:

"'Telephone Mr. and Mrs. Browne that Miss Browne has fallen off her horse.'"—Everybody's Magazine.

Out of His Hands.

Uncle Mose, needing money, sold his pig to the wealthy Northern lawyer who had just bought the neighboring plantation. After a time, needing more money, he stole the pig and resold it, this time to Judge Pickens, who lived "down the road a piece." Soon afterward the two gentlemen met, and upon comparing notes, suspected what had happened. They confronted Uncle Mose. The old darky cheerfully admitted his guilt.

"Well," demanded Judge Pickens, "what are you going to do about it?"

"Blessed of I know, jedge," replied Uncle Mose with a broad grin. "I'se no lawyer. I reckon I'll have to let yo' two gen'men settle it between yo'selves."—Everybody's Magazine.

The Trouble with Harland

With the approach of spring, off went young Harland to the woods and fields. He carried his painting apparatus on his back, in a box of his own devising, so ingenious that it may be said to have contained all the necessities of a studio. With the sky of the branches of a tree for a roof, and a folding camp stool for a seat, it was all the studio he wanted from April to September. His personal belongings, or such of them as he needed during those six months, were contained in a small satchel. It is wonderful what a few clothes you can do with if you are content with a suit of homespun for both morning and evening wear, and a flannel shirt with its own flannel collar. Carrying with him the studio, his wardrobe and his library, which consisted for the summer months of a pocket Horace, and a paper novel to be kept until it was read and then exchanged for another, young Harland was as happy as a king, and ready for anything.

He took the train out of London to whatever country, either in England or abroad, he wanted to explore. Then he went wherever his fancy led him, but never used wheels again until he traveled back to London in the autumn, with a box full of clever sketches and a few finished pictures.

He slept in country inns, cottages or farmhouses, and made many friends. For he was sociable by nature, and had a theory that the better you knew the people of a country the better you painted it. Sometimes he stayed in one place for days together, painted every day and all day. Sometimes he painted very little, but lounged about and talked to anybody who was willing to talk to him. Sometimes, if he felt that he needed exercise, or if the weather was against him, he walked day after day, as if walking were his main object in life. But, whatever he did, he enjoyed every hour of the spring and summer.

He had been intended for the bar, and had been to a public school and a university. His father had died soon after he had taken his degree, and he was told that he would have just £100 a year to live on, when he had expected about a thousand. So the bar was out of the question, and he was not sorry. He was alone in the world and could do what he liked, and what he liked was to paint, although he had never, hitherto, dared to say so.

One day in early June he was painting on the edge of a beech wood. The fresh green of the young leaves framed a lovely picture of blue, spreading country, over which the wind sang and pushed white clouds and ever-shifting lights and shadows.

He was absorbed in his work, and although he heard a step behind him on the crisp beech-mast, did not look up till he was called by name.

"Hullo, Harland! I thought it was you."

"Hullo, Burrows!" he said. "Am I trespassing on your cherished property?"

Burrows had been at Oxford with him, and was known for a rich man. Now he was not much over thirty, but had added greatly to his paternal inheritance by financial operations in the city.

"I don't usually allow people in here," said Burrows, "but you are welcome. By Jove! that's a good picture! I'll buy it if you like. I didn't know you were an artist, Harland. Do you make it pay?"

"The same money-grubbing old Burrows as ever! It pays me much better than anything you ever did pays you."

"By Jove! then it must pay pretty well. But I don't believe it. You can't know what I have been doing with myself for the last ten years or so, Harland."

"I know very well, my opulent Burrows. Your praise is in all the papers. But sit down under that tree and tell me about it. With all your virtues, you are not transparent, and I don't want to lose this light."

"Well, there's not much to tell," said Burrows. "I've made a lot of money, and I'm making more every day. But if you call me a money-grubber again I'll have you up for trespass. I know how to spend the stuff as well as make it. I've bought this place, for one thing. Did you ever see a more beautiful view than this of mine?"

"It is a very beautiful view. But I don't know why you should call it yours. It is just as much mine as long as I am looking at it. And when I have finished this picture I shall go away and look at another one."

"Oh, that's the idea, is it? You are not really rich."

"That is the idea. And I am rich. I have everything I want."

"I've got a splendid old house here and a lovely garden. Gardening is a hobby of mine."

"So it is of mine. I'll come and look at your garden, and thank you for keeping it up for me. People are keeping up gardens for me to look at all over the country. How many houses have you got?"

"How many houses? I've got this, and one in town."

"Only two, Burrows? I've got houses all over the country. I sleep in a different one nearly every night."

"Which means you've got none. You don't know the pleasures of buying old furniture and beautiful things."

"Oh, furniture! I can only sleep in one bed at a time, and sit in one chair at a time, and eat at one table at a time."

"Well, then, pictures! I'm buying pictures now, and paying big prices for them."

"Why?"

"Well, to look at, for one thing."

"I can look at all the pictures in all the galleries in Europe for nothing. It's as good, my dear Burrows. Everything in life is made either to look at or to use, and—"

"Well, what about books? I'm collecting a library."

"You can't read more than one book at a time, and books are cheap enough nowadays to buy and throw away again—at least, the best books are. You may be able to buy yourself the use of a few things which I can't afford, such as motor cars, but a train gets the quicker at the end, and my legs get there quick enough for me. And as long as I can buy myself the use of everything I want, I say I am as rich as you. As for the things you want to look at, the richest man in the world can't buy more than a few of them, and I don't know why he should want to buy any."

"Well, I dare say it's all very clever, Harland, but nobody but a fool would deny that there is pleasure in possessing things."

"I'm not a fool, and I don't deny it. But look what you have to pay for them. First, you must give up most of your time to buy them with. That is an occupation like any other, and it may suit you. I would rather do something else. Then you must stop in the place where your possessions are, or they are of no use to you. I would rather keep my freedom. Learn to do without any possessions whatever, my good Burrows, and you will be a really rich and happy man, as I am. Now, with all your success, you are only moderately well off."

"Well, I think we had better go and have some lunch. I'll give you the use of a bottle of claret that you won't get everywhere; or, if you like, you can look at it while I drink it."

Burrows had a very charming wife to whom he appeared devoted, and two beautiful children, whom Harland engaged to paint in the winter when his year's wanderings should be over.

He found in Mrs. Burrows a warm ally when he expiated further on his philosophy of life.

"If I had my way," she said, "Tom would sell this house and everything in it, and we would live in a caravan, or, perhaps, three caravans—one for us, one for the children and one for the servants. Mr. Harland, I think you are the wisest man I ever met."

Then, a little later she changed over completely, as is said to be the way of women. "I know what is the matter with Mr. Harland," she said. "He has never wanted to get married."

"Ah!" said Burrows. "When he does he will come out of the cloud. A wife and family, my boy! That's a possession you must have of your very own; and it's worth all the rest put together."

TRAINING FOR SOCIETY.

Be Quiet—Don't Screech or Call From One Room to Another.

A woman who after years of humble living in the Middle West was wafted unexpectedly to Newport on the wings of sudden wealth and there succeeded in making good is said to have done so with the aid of a trainer—a social trainer, of course.

This trainer when asked what was the first thing he taught the invader said:

"To be quiet. She had a habit of calling her servants, her children—whomever she wanted to speak to. She is of an energetic, bustling disposition; the first thing she had to learn was to make no more noise than was absolutely necessary. Then I engaged an elocution teacher for her. You wouldn't believe the improvement he made in her voice."

In commenting on the circumstance Harper's Bazar points out the fact that women can have free elocution lessons by taking some trouble and thought about it. "When we go to church or to a lecture, to a club meeting or a political meeting, we can listen attentively to the men and women who speak well and try to learn from them what qualities to cultivate, while from the bad speaker we shall learn to be on the lookout for the same faults in ourselves and try to overcome or at least to modify them.

"It is far more important for the average woman that she should talk well than that she should sing well. People are not forced to listen to your singing, but your friends, your family, your fellow citizens have to hear you talk.

"Avoid making unnecessary noise. Be as nearly noiseless in your house as you can, so shall your neighbors bless you and your landlord refrain from raising your rent.

"Never call to your children or your servants. If they are in another part of the house either ring for them or go and find them. A screech is an offense against humanity. If you are in a hotel, a train or in any public place, maintain that golden silence which should be the ideal of every traveler."

SCHEMERS OF SCHEMES ARE BACK

THINGS OF THE PAST
BACK IN OUR MIDST WITH "THE BIGGEST PROPOSITION EVER"

They are coming back, these dreamers of dreams and schemers of dreams, awakening as from Rip Van Winkle sleep, and the corridors of the hotels again ring with their cheerful laughter and gleam with the headlights of their jewelry restored. The fur-lined overcoat has come from the oblivion of the abode of the personal pledge, and no longer do trousers desolately bag at the knee, while frayed edges sweep the rusty uppers.

The promoters bask in the dawning sun of prosperity, and they return as the knights of "the biggest proposition ever" to invite the dollar of capital to new enterprises. Mining properties are waiting the Midas touch of development and the agent of "The Frozen Toad," and "The Bat Frayed Goat" has come out of hallroom retirement and parlors' ties to live again in the kingdom of easy money.

It is a joy these days to see the bright waistcoats flit from table to table in the cafes like butterflies and to catch the glint of dangling chains of gold.

The man with money is more wary, but none the less the promoters who have come back to their old places of rendezvous are regaining their easy confidence. To quote their own vernacular, they have rediscovered New York, and all "looks good" to them.

No Chance for a Romance.

A young woman living in the neighborhood of Thirty-third and Cumberland streets the other morning bought at a nearby grocery a dozen eggs. On one among them there was scratched the name, with address, of a young farmer up the state. He had also written on the egg a request the person buying it write to him.

The young woman wrote a letter to the tiller of the soil and received an answer in which the farmer declared himself pleased at having heard from her, etc. He wound his letter up with:

"Now, Sandy, I'd like that dog myself, and here's twenty shillings if you'll sell him."

He counted out twenty shillings on the table near Sandy. Without a smile the man drew a sixpence from his pocket, and said, as he took up the twenty shillings:

After all tariff revision downward seems to be up-hill work.

The legislature adjourns April 22 —three weeks from today.

We are soon to be without Leavitt —and yet the state hasn't tipped over.

It is to be known as the Payne bill. It will also give the real friends of tariff reform a pain.

"A man's a fool if he believes everything his wife tells him," says the Philosopher of Folly, "but he's a bigger fool if he doesn't pretend he does."

If it is true that plenty of air and sunshine is a cure for consumption, how is it that the red man is gradually disappearing through the ravages of consumption

The Payne tariff bill effects the Minnesota farmer thiswise: he pays more for his coffee and gets less for his barley. It's up to him to drink barley substitute for coffee.

The attorney general has given an opinion that no senator who was a member of the session of 1907 is eligible for governor next year. This disposes of a number of likely candidates on both sides of the political fence.

The Northfield News declares that "from the standpoint of party, republicans will have small reasons to congratulate themselves on the vote on the tonnage tax bill. If it hadn't been for the thirteen democrats and three prohibitionists it would have been buried out of sight.."

In Sleepy Eye, according to the St. Peter Free Press, the school board has taken a decided stand against the use of tobacco by the pupils and the police are instructed to arrest every pupil not complying with this order. It is a state law and the village authorities are determined to enforce it.

Grover Cleveland used to say he could go into any little country town and find a man fit to be a member of his cabinet. Cleveland was one of the few men who were smart enough to know of the unknown great men in the small towns and in the country and in the country surrounding them.

Bob Dunn's Princeton Union takes this view of Senator McCall's bill regarding election of United States senators:

"United States senators ought to be elected by a direct vote of the people but that is impossible under the present Federal constitution. The next best thing is for each state to imitate the example set by Oregon and have senatorial candidates submit their claims to the people. The legislature should ratify the choice of the people. In this state if Governor Johnson desires to go to the United States senate and the people to send him he ought to go. We hope to see Senate McCall's bill, which is somewhat similiar to the Oregon law, pass the present session of he legislature."

The "pork" bill, as the bill appropriating $300,000 for roads and bridges is characterized by members from the twin cities, has passed the senate and has been sent to the governor for his approval. The amount voted for this purpose is $100,000 in excess of that voted two years ago. Red Lake county gets about $7,500 of the "swag."

The senate killed the Cashman distance tariff bill Friday. The vote was 23 to 23. Some of the most eminent attorneys of the senate voted for the bill. Former Attorney General Young, who has charge of the present rate cases for the state, was quoted in debate as strongly opposed to further legislative action until the present cases are disposed of.

The spoils system impels men to make all they can within a limited time. The merit system admonishes them to play fair and so hold their jobs without reference. One tempts a man to graft while he has a chance. The other prompts him to so conduct himself as to retain a good thing. This waives moral considerations—but so do many politicians.

The monthly bulletin issued by the state insurance department shows that the fire losses in Minnesota during the month of January amounted to $8,600,000 compared with $520,00 for the same month last year. The losses are unusually large and amount to one-third the losses for the entire country during the same months. In Duluth the losses were $846,797.29, Minneapolis $1,180,794.72, and St. Paul $502,807.36.

"Is it true that many of these Mormons have half a dozen wives? each?" asked a visitor of a Salt Lake City policeman who was stationed near the temple, says the Saturday Evening Post. "Sure", said the policeman. "Well, will you kindly tell me why on earth a man wants to marry half a dozen wives?" "I dunno," said the policeman, "unless he thinks that mebbe he can get a good one out of the bunch."

Mayor Lawler of St. Paul has announced himself in favor of woman suffrage. In doing so he said:

"If an inhabitant from Mars should visit St. Paul to view the social and economic conditions here and see our women at work in the factories, the schools and the hospitals and practicing all the professions with as great skill and success as the men, and bearing their just burden of the taxes should ask, on election day, why the women did not vote, what explanation would be given?"

Speaking by the card, Mr. Rockefellow's latest gift of a million to Chicago University brings the total of his contributions to the funds of that institution up to $24,875,365. Gifts from other sources foot up $7,128,484, making a total of $31,503,849. Of this amount about $5,000,000 have been used for current expenses, leaving a balance of $26,500,000 as its present productive endowment. A handsome showing, remarks the Boston Herald, for a University less than 20 years old.

All of the legisaltures are now passing kidnapping bills. After every great holocaust or calamity a lot of corrective laws are passed, only to be forgotten as soon as public excitement wanes. We all remember that following the Chicago theatre disaster legislatures and city councils compelled the managers to install asbestos curtains and provide easier exit. These regulations may have served a useful purpose, but people generally have forgotton about the matter. We forget so soon.

The Lancet tells a story about a patient with malignant disease of the throat who consulted a specialist. The surgeon recommended the removal of the larynx. The patient expressed a fear that the operation was very dangerous. "Oh, no," said the surgeon, "you are sure to recover." "But," said the patient, "I understood that the operation was very serious indeed." "Well," said the surgeon, "my reason for saying that you are sure to recover is this: The mortality is nineteen out of twenty, and I have had nineteen deaths already."

Two bills have been introduced in the legislature which are attracting more or less attention among the school authorities of the state in that if they become laws they will effect a material change in conditions. The first bill increases the special state aid to the various classes of schools, as follows: High schools, from $1,500 to $2,000; graded school, from $520 to $600; semi-graded schools from $250 to $320; and second class rural schools, from $50 to $100. The second bill provides that the state shall add $10 per month to the salary of every first grade rural teacher, if the district has not less than eight months of school and pays not less than $50 per month; and that it shall add $5 in like manner to the salary of every second-grade teacher whose district pays not less than $40 per month. Both measures are of vital importance to the school interests and are being pushed by those interested in bettering the conidtions surrounding the educational institutions of the state.

TAX WEALTH, NOT POVERTY

Debate upon the tariff was begun last Tuesday in the house by Mr. Payne. He and his associates have many things to explain, says the New York World.

Why is tea to be taxed eight and nine cents a pound? Wayne MacVeagh has told Mr. Payne, in a letter worthy of the lofty idealism of an austerer past, that many rich men would prefer to pay taxes that would rob them of no luxury rather than see increasing burdens laid upon "those less fortunate brothers whose lives are passed in that increasing calculation of sorrow where hard toil sometimes provides—and sometimes fails to provide—sufficient daily bread." Why not leave tea free and make the inheritance tax, as Mr. Carnegie suggests, "good and stiff."

Why leave upon sugar a tariff of nearly two cents a pound, which Mr. MacVeagh truly calls "infamous," as it often takes from the laboring man more than from the richest multi-millionaire? Why not make sugar free, saving $1 or more a year for a poor man with a numerous brood, and get revenue by a constutional graduated income tax. Why, as Mr. MacVeagh asks, exempt from proper taxation the "colossal incomes and colossal accumlations" of surplus wealth?

Why raise the tariff rates on machine-knit stockings, gloves and a dozen other articles of the commonest use. Why keep the wool rates nearly at the preposterous height which compels poor men to shiver in shoddy and cotton in our bitter winds?

Will not the maximum and minimum provision, as The World suggested when the bill was reported, in practise rob the consumer? The maximum rate must be enforced against Brazil because she has an export coffee duty. That would mean nearly a cent a pound tax upon three-fourths of all the coffee we get. The "retaliation" would be upon the American people. The faithful Tribune suggests that we might be obliged to use the maximum rate even against our best customer, Great Britain.

So far as the Payne bill does reduce the tariff upon important staples, as in steel, wood and paper schedule, it is a short step in the right direction.

But it leaves tariff rates still far beyond defensible limits. It perpetuates the plundering of the consumer. It is, as the minority says, "sectional and prohibitive." It leaves the inevitable great battle for tariff reform an uncertainty still hanging over the business community. It is but a sop to public opinion.

Yet clear and plain lies the path of fiscal common sense. Tax wealth, not poverty.

BLOOD

We live by our blood, and on it. We thrive or starve, as our blood is rich or poor. There is nothing else to live on or by.

When strength is full and spirits high we are being refreshed—bone, muscle and brain, in body and mind—with continual flow of rich blood. This is health.

When weak, in low spirits, no cheer, no spring, when rest is not rest and sleep is not sleep, we are starved; our blood is poor; there is little nutriment in it.

Back of the blood is food, to keep the blood rich. When it fails, take

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Mankato Free Press: "Women may fight the tariff on stockings," is the news flashed over the wires. Sock it to 'em.

Red Wing Republican: A Michigan judge has decided that a girl who breaks an engagement must return the ring. This is a wise decision and a just one for it's usually easier for a young man to get another girl than it is to get another ring.

Albert Lea Times-Enterprise: Industrial enterpise has gone mad. Law and morals have no place in the category of commercial virtues. Success can only be achieved by a system of plunder based upon an evasion of the laws of the land.

Pirnceton Union: That President Taft is a kind-hearted man is shown by the fact that he has sent Elmer W. Loring, a boy who formerly carried his golf sticks around the links, to the University of Virginia and will allow him $2 a day until he graduates. Then Mr. Taft intends placing the young man in a position of trust.

Virignia Virginian: Jack London, the author, has been forced by illness to give up his tour around the world in his yacht, the Snark. Sultry days spent in Southern waters did not agree with the man who wrote tales of the wilds of Alaska and who has traveled over the Chilcoot pass on different occasions. He will return at once to his home in California.

Litchfield Independant: Minnesota will become a great fruit state as soon as farmers change their methods and devote more time to this branch. No place in the country can raise better small fruits, plums and apples than Minnesota.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: The fatter a woman gets the easier it is for her to believe nobody notices it.

A girl's idea of a strange man is somebody it would be exciting to know because she doesn't.

The cynic can smile now and then; he is rarely called upon to shed a tear over his disappeintment.

The queer thing about a wedding tour is what a complete cure for a man wanting to travel with his wife it always seems to be.

CURES INDIGESTION.

All Distress from Stomach and Indigestion Vanishes in Five Minutes.

Take your sour stomach—or maybe you call it indegestion, dyspepsia, gastritis or catarrh of the stomach; it does not matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to the Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your stomach misery.

The correct name for your trouble is food fermentation—food souring; the digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nauseau, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constiptaion, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness and many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself, after your next meal, that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong.

Stop this fermentation and begin eating of what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin. 27-30

The True Story of an Interview Told In 1918.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"You must admit," I said to Count Haenant while we were pacing the deck of an ocean steamer, "that the late emperor was impolitic."

"Not at all. There was always a method in his madness."

"What method could there possibly have been in that affair of the suppressed interview which stirred up the whole world and put the emperor in a humiliating position?"

"The secret history of that affair has never been published. It was never known to more than three persons besides the emperor and his chancellor, and I am now the only person living in possession of it."

"What, you?"

"Yes, I. And, what's more, I'm going to give it to you. Listen. There was then in William's service a man whom he consulted more on matters of statecraft than even Von Bulow. Baron Trengel was during the period of his intimacy with the late emperor between the ages of thirty-five and forty. He was handsome as a picture and would have been attractive to women had he taken any interest in them. But he was a pronounced woman hater.

"While traveling in Egypt Trengel fell in with a party of your countrymen from New York, among them a Miss Rebecca Wray. She had come over and remained with her fellow travelers by permission, having, it was understood, been graduated from school the previous spring. Her trip was intended as a finisher to her education.

"Trengel had never before fallen under the influence of one of your unconventional, coquettish American girls. His ideas of women were derived from the German fraulein of noble blood and more especially from an old maid sister ten years his senior who kept house for him. Miss Wray made nothing of visiting the ruins of the temple of Karnak with him unchaperoned or sailing alone with him on the Nile.

"The next heard of Miss Wray she was in Berlin, chaperoned by an entirely different party from that which she was supposed to have traveled with in Egypt. She had not been there long before she received invitations to houses whose owners were in high life and dined with the late emperor and the now dowager empress. She spent some time ostensibly visiting Trengel's old maid sister, and while there she was riding, driving and hunting in madcap fashion with the baron.

"One morning Trengel was summoned to Berlin by the emperor for conference. Your countrymen were getting rather too thick with the Japanese to please his majesty, and he desired to head them off. At this interview a number of different matters were taken up, all of them of importance in European complications. Trengel when in conference with the emperor was accustomed to jot down the points discussed; also William's views. On returning to his schloss he found Miss Wray, who had remained during his absence with his sister, and was so delighted to be reunited with her that he did something he had never done before. He tossed his notebook on his desk in the library to hasten out for a ride with the girl who had infatuated him.

"That was the last he thought of the notebook till the next morning. Then he hurried to the library to find it gone. Breakfast was waiting for the guest, who had not yet come down. After waiting some time for her the baron sent to her room. She as well as the notebook had disappeared.

"The consternation that seized upon the baron was nothing to that of the emperor when Trengel went to Berlin and told him the story. The police were notified, and the secret service men got on the case in a hurry. Not a train in Germany that was not under surveillance of government emissaries, each having a detailed description of the American girl. They failed to catch her. A boy excited some suspicion, but got across the frontier without being detained, the German detectives having been instructed to look out for a girl. It was afterward supposed that this boy was the slippery Miss Wray in disguise.

"Miss Wray's identity and position afterward became known to those of us in the secret. She was the daughter of a poor professor in an American university. She was twenty-two years old at that time and had taken nearly every honor in a woman's college for which she was eligible for competition. Leaving college, she went to New York and worked on one of the principal papers there. It was this paper that sent her abroad for news of certain diplomatic questions of interest to the people of the United States.

"Miss Wray, who had always known the want of money and consequently knew its value, saw a chance for a fortune. She wrote out an interview with the emperor of Germany and sold it to a London paper for $100,000. Since she could show Trengel's notebook containing confirmation of what she put in the emperor's mouth she had everything her own way.

"Now comes the part taken by the emperor. He never visited on his friend Trengel any punishment or displeasure, bearing the obloquy heaped upon him for doing too much talking. Trengel, however, shut himself up in his schloss and was never again seen at court. Three years after the affair of which he was the unknown cause he committed suicide."

WORK WEAKENS KIDNEYS.

Doan's Kidney Pills Have Done Great Service for People Who Work in Red Lake Falls.

Most Red Lake Falls people work every day in some strained, unnatural position—bending constatnly over a desk—riding on jolting wagons or cars—doing laborious housework; lifting reaching or pulling, or trying the back in a hundred and one other ways. All the strains tend to wear, weaken and injure the kidneys until they fall behind in their work of filtering the poisons from the blood. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys, put new strength in bad backs.

Noel Herbert of 338 Hunter St., Crookston, Minn., says: "My back pained terribly and totally unfitted me for any exertion. There were times when I had to be helped up and although during the past winter I felt somewhat better, I was still far from being well. I heard about Doan's Pills and finally procured a box. I started using them and it was not long before I noticed that my back was gradually getting better. I am glad to state that the old trouble entirely left me and I have not felt a vestige of it since. I give them the endorsement with the hope that others may be convinced of the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills.

The above statement was made by Mr. Hebert in 1898, nearly six years later he added: "Doan's Kidney Pills so completely relieved me of kidney trouble six years ago that there had been no return of it. It is a pleasure to again endorse this remedy."

S.S.S. FOR BAD BLOOD

The most important part of the human system is the blood. Every muscle, nerve, tissue, bone and sinew is dependent on this vital fluid for nourishment and strength necessary to maintain them in health and enable each to perform the different duties nature requires. Even the heart, the very "engine" of life, receives its vigor and motive power from the blood. Since so much is dependent on this vital fluid it can very readily be seen how necessary it is to have it pure and uncontaminated if we would enjoy the blessing of good health. Bad blood is responsible for most of the ailments of mankind; when from any cause it becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, disease in some form is sure to follow. Muddy, sallow complexions, eruptions, pimples, etc., show that the blood is infected with unhealthy humors which have changed it from a pure, fresh stream to a sour, acrid fluid, which forces out its impurities through the pores and glands of the skin. A very common evidence of bad blood is sores or ulcers, which break out on the flesh, often from a very insignificant bruise or even scatch or abrasion. If the blood was pure and healthy the place would heal at once, but being loaded with impurities, which are discharged into the wound, irritation and inflammation are set up and the sore continues. Bad blood is also responsible for Anaemia, Boils, Malaria, etc.; the weak, polluted circulation cannot furnish the nourishment and strength required to sustain the body, and a general run-down condition of health results. S. S. S. is nature's blood purifier and tonic; made entirely of healing, cleansing roots and herbs. It goes down into the circulation and removes every particle of impurity, humor or poison that may be there, restores lost vitality, and steadily tones up the entire system. It adds to the blood the healthful properties it is in need of, and in every way assists in the cure of disease. S. S. S. neutralizes any excess of acid in the blood, making it fresh and pure, and permanently cures Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and all other skin diseases and eruptions. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, and all other diseases or disorders arising from bad blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice desired free to all who write.

Your S. S. S., in my opinion, is as good a medicine as can be made; it simply cannot be improved upon as a remedy to purify and enrich the blood and to invigorate and tone up the system. This spring my blood was bad and I was run down in health, and having seen your medicine highly advertised I commenced its use. Today my blood is in fine condition and my general health is of the best. Am filling position as fireman for a large concern here, and if I was not in good physical condition it would be impossible for me to fill the place. Your S. S. S. has been of great service to me and I do not hesitate to give it the credit it deserves.

SAID TO BE FINE,

This Simple Home-Made Treatment Will Overcome Rheumatism.

Few people here know that you can cure that dread American disease, rheumatism, with just common every day drugs found in any drug store. The prescription is so simple that any one can prepare it at home at small cost. It is made up as follows: Get from any good prescription pharmacy Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. These are all simple ingredients, makng an absolutey harmless home remedy at little cost.

Rheumatism, as everyone knows, is a symptom of deranged kidneys. It is a condition produced by the failure of the kidneys to properly filter or strain from the blood the uric acid and other matter, which, if not eradicated, either in the urine or through the skin pores, remains in the blood, decomposes and forms about the joints and muscles, causing the untold suffering and the deformity of rheumatism.

This prescription is said to be a splendid healing, cleansing and invigorating tonic to the kidneys, and gives almost immediate relief in all forms of bladder and urinary troubles and backache.

Barbarous Impudence.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"How do you account," said the English girl, "for the way your American girls marry our most desirable bachelors? I mean those cases where money is not the prime motive."

"Well, I think impudence has more to do with it than anything else."

"Impudence! What do you mean?"

"Perhaps I had better illustrate. I will tell you a story of which the heroine, if she can be called such, is well known to me. As a girl she was no more like the typical English girl than a gypsy is like a queen. She was nineteen years old, not very pretty, with a thin, fairly tall figure and a pair of eyes with which she could express any emotion she felt or did not feel. She was 'doing' England as thousands of Americans 'do' Europe—guidebook in hand—in company with a party from her native state, Indiana.

"Well, one morning two or three of them, the girl—Eliza Kimball, I'll call her—included, went to visit an English castle near the Scotch border. There were two other girls, an elderly man and a boy. They walked to the castle and stood at the gate waiting to know if strangers were admitted; but, since there appeared to be no gatekeeper about, Eliza led the way in. They hadn't gone a dozen steps before a man in overalls, his hands covered with black grease, came out of a basement door and, seeing the party approaching, waited till they came up.

"'Are strangers admitted to the castle?' asked Eliza.

"'Not today.'

"'Oh, dear, we've come all the way from Indianapolis to see it. How disappointing!'

"'And where is Indianapolis?' asked the man.

"'Indianapolis! You don't know where Indianapolis is! I'm surprised. If you had our public school system in England even a mechanic like you would know where that is. It's the capital of Indiana, United States of America.'

"'Well, since you've come so far to see the castle I suppose I'll have to give you a chance. Come with me.'

"He showed them everywhere, inside and outside. Eliza walked beside him, plying him with questions. She soon noticed that any one they met showed surprising deference to their guide.

"'Who is the man in overalls?' she asked of a lackey.

"'He's Lord Walter Furgeson, his grace's youngest son.'

"'You don't mean it! What makes him wear such togs?'

"'He has a fancy for machinery. He's invented many valuable things.'

"'Oh, he has! Much obliged for the information.' And she rejoined the party. Sailing up beside Lord Walter, she said:

"'Come; we've had enough of these musty pictures. There's not a real bright one among them. Show us something more inspiriting.'

"The young man smiled. 'There's nothing here less than 300 years old, not even the furniture.'

"'Well, then, I think it time you got some new things. If a chair lasts twenty years in America we think it's doing well. We throw it away after that and get a new one. It keeps things fresh.'

"'Everything is fresh in America, I believe.'

"'Even we girls. We haven't any old fashioned notions. Now, in America, if you, even in your overalls, were to show yourself worthy, you'd be treated just as well as any one.'

"'Would I, indeed?'

"'Certainly. You come to Indianapolis when I'm there, and I'll show you around and introduce you everywhere. You can wear your overalls too.'

"They went through the rest of the old pile, and at everything that was particularly ancient Eliza would say, 'Why don't you freshen it up?' or 'Can't the duke afford to buy a new one?' or make some other equally deprecating remark. And when their guide led them to the gate she took a half crown from her portemonnaie and handed it to him. He didn't want to take it, but she said: 'Nonsense! You've earned it. Never refuse what you've earned honestly. That's the way our men get rich and their daughters come over here to marry into your nobility and keep these old castles patched up with their fathers' fortunes.'

"Lord Walter took the coin and went up to his apartments to change his costume for evening dress.

"'How I did fool that American girl!' he said to his valet.

"'I think not, your lordship,' said the valet. 'Murphy told me she asked him who you were and he told her.'

"The young man paused in putting on a white silk waistcoat with gold buttons and stared.

"'By Jove!' he exclaimed, and that was his only comment.

"He joined a party of highbred English girls at dinner, but he couldn't dismiss from his mind that impudent American girl who had dared to talk to him, knowing his station, as if he had really been a greasy mechanic. That night he lay awake thinking about her thin form, her American accent and, above all, those eyes of hers—expressive brown eyes that looked so innocent—and he tumbled all over the bed.

"Well, to make a long story short, in about two months he went to Indianapolis, was introduced to all Eliza Kimball's friends and took her back with him to England.

"That's what I mean by impudence winning your men over here. You English girls are too timid."

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

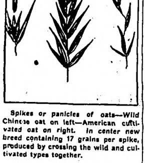
SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT BREEDING ON THE FARM

Practical Method by Which the Quality of the Grain Raised Can Be Improved.

Unlike the corn plant, wheat is normally self-fertilized, almost no crossing occurring naturally, and for this reason the individuals or plats grown need not be isolated as in corn breeding. Dr. H. J. Webber of Cornell university considers it possible that without resorting to the generally complex methods of hybridization and selection farmers may produce valuable varieties and also improve the yield of their own crop. The methods by which this may be accomplished are: (1) The selection of chance variations or sports and the propagation from them of improved varieties; (2) the systematic selection of the best yielding plants from a well-known race to secure better yielding strains; and (3) the selection of large heads for seed.

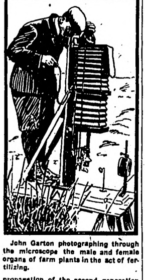
The search for promising plants should be begun as soon as the crop shows mature size of heads, and when such plants are located they should be marked so that the seed may be secured when ripe. The seed from each selected plant should be kept separate and weighed, if the facilities are at hand, in order that comparisons may be made later on. Each one of these plants, which are the first generation selections, should be given a number and briefly described.

It is recommended that the seed of each plant be planted separately in a short row on a clean and well-tilled piece of ground. These rows may be placed one foot apart and about every twentieth row should be planted with some standard variety for comparison. At the beginning of the ripening period the season of maturing of the different rows must be observed to determine their relative earliness or lateness, and when fully ripe the rows should be compared with each other and with the rows of standard varieties. Only those rows apparently ranking high in yield, free from or least affected by disease, such as rust or smut, showing no tendency to lodging or shattering, and those indicating the greatest hardiness should be selected for further propagation. After the superior rows have been chosen each row must be examined for uniformity of type and all plants not conforming to the general type pulled out and discarded. The grain or seed of each row is harvested and kept separately and given the number of the individual plant first selected. The record of yield, earliness, hardiness, etc., of each number must be carefully preserved.



Spikes or panicles of oats—Wild Chinese oat on left—American cultivated oat on right. In center new breed containing 17 grains per spike, produced by crossing the wild and cultivated types together.

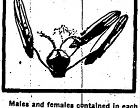
The seed secured from these first generation selections is used for the propagation of the second generation according to the following plan:



John Garton photographing through the microscope the male and female organs of farm plants in the act of fertilizing.

"Plant a drill row 17 feet long, using a definite rate of seeding; one-half ounce of seed per row would be at the rate of about one and one-half bushels of seed per acre and should be thick enough. These 17-foot rows should be planted one foot apart, so that one row represents one-sixteenth of a square rod, or one two-thousand-five-hundred-and-sixtieth of an acre. Plant as many 17-foot rows from each kind as the amount of seed obtained will plant, but if more than one row is planted place them in different parts of the field, in order to obtain a better judgment of the variation due to soil. In planting the 17-foot rows at least every twentieth row should again be planted with a standard variety for comparison."

When the grain is ripe all inferior rows are again discarded, the best rows harvested separately, the grain from each row weighed for comparison with other rows as well as with the standard varieties, and the results recorded.



Males and females contained in each hull and necessary to produce one oat grain—female in center.

The third generation is grown in 17-foot rows from the seed of all of the second generation rows selected, and the results of this year should point out the best yielding strains. It is advised that of a few of the very best and highest yielding strains somewhat larger plants be grown this year to increase the seed for more extensive planting in the fourth generation. A few of the best yielding strains should be saved from this year's crop for more extensive trials in the fifth year.

For the fourth generation 17-foot test rows are planted with the strains retained from the third generation and these are compared with some standard variety. If possible, several test rows of the standard varieties should be grown in different parts of the test plat. At maturity the grain of each test row is harvested and weighed separately, as heretofore, and the yield records carefully made and preserved. By comparing the yields of the test rows and increase-plats of each strain for the three years with each other and with the yields of the standard varieties the highest yielding strains to be retained for extensive trial may readily be determined.

T. R. Garton of England says in reference to his experiments in cross breeding of wheat that valuable breeding plants have been found in some of the indigenous or wild types of Russian wheats, which while possessing some defects were likewise quite superior in other points of merit. For instance, the tenacity of chaff is so marked and the brittleness at the base of the grain so great (speltz wheats break off when bent) that the grain cannot be threshed out by any mechanical operation. On the other hand, they are extremely early, stiff in the straw, and possess excellent glutinous properties. Consequently these types have been used as parents in breeding to embody more tenacity in the chaff of cultivated wheats, thereby making the new varieties more strongly storm-proof. Some of the progeny of crosses of the speltz wheats with ordinary types have been left in the fields six weeks after ripening without loss of grain. Another result is a wheat seven to ten days earlier than early English cultivated types, and possessing a higher percentage of gluten.

AS TO SHEEP AND FERTILITY

By E. E. Hozen.

When it comes to building up the fertility of soil they put the dairy cow to shame. I can show you fields, that before the sheep came were said to be too poor to even raise another good crop, yet in the fall of 1907 the best crop of corn ever raised on the land was taken from these fields. From one flock of 125 western ewes, nearly $1,000 in lambs and wool was realized the first year. The second year the flock was reduced to 100 ewes. Ninety of them raised 142 lambs. The 142 lambs and the wool from the ewes brought $9.74 per head for the 92 ewes. This year with what the owner called poor luck and a large percentage of the lambs coming late, the first lot went at a weight of 70 pounds, and sold at $6.25, top price; the next lot went after the western run, weighing 78 pounds and selling at $6.40, top price. And each year the market reporter made special comment on the quality of these lambs.

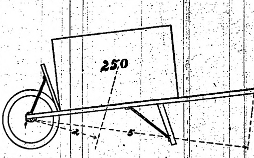
Remove It at Once.—Each cow's milk should be taken from the barn separately and not allowed to remain in the barn until the whole herd is milked. If milk is to be separated on the farm it should be run through the separator while warm. Cream should be cooled as soon as possible and warm cream should not be mixed with cream already cooled. Cover cans with a light, clean cloth, which will admit air but keep out dirt. Keep the separator clean by the use of plenty of water. Air all vessels after cleaning.—R. B. Collin.

THE MECHANICS OF THE WHEELBARROW

Longer Handles Increase the Leverage and Lighten the Load—By C. J. Lynde, Macdonald College.

The principle of the wheelbarrow is the same as that of the crowbar. For example, if a man is standing still and is simply lifting a weight on a wheelbarrow, then the axle of the wheel is the turning point or fulcrum. If the distance from the axle to the hands is 5 feet and from the axle to a line drawn vertically downwards from the center of the weight is 2 feet, then the leverage is 5 to 2 or 2½ to 1, and 100 pounds of force exerted upwards by the hands will lift 250 pounds of weight on the barrow. If the load is piled up over the wheel so that a line drawn vertically downwards from the center passes one foot from the axle, then the leverage is 5 to 1, and 100 pounds of force will lift 500 pounds of weight on the barrow. This explains why the small boy, and the big boy, too, always loads this way.

In these calculations we have left out of account the force necessary to lift the handles when the barrow is empty; from 10 to 15 pounds is necessary for this in the ordinary barrow. If the wheelbarrow is moved along the road, still more force will be necessary, and the amount will depend on the load and its position with respect to the wheel and on the nature of the road.



Advantage of Long Handles Illustrated

The barrow belongs to levers of the second class and this class of lever is identified by the fact that the weight always comes between the force and the fulcrum. Other examples of this class of levers are the gate, the door, and nut-crackers.

Long handles on a wheelbarrow are a decided advantage.

In the ordinary garden wheelbarrow the handles are about four feet long. This is the distance from the axle to the center of the hand grip. If a weight of 100 pounds is placed on the barrow in such a position that the center of it is 2 feet from the axle the leverage is 1 to 2, or 2 to 1. The hands lift one-half of 100 pounds, or 50 pounds, that is, 25 pounds each.

If the handles were made 5 feet long with the weight in the same position, the leverage would be 5 to 2. The hands would lift 2-5 of 100 pounds, 40 pounds, or 20 pounds each.

If the handles were made 6 feet long the leverage would be 6 to 2 or 3 to 1. The hands would lift 1-3 of 100 pounds, 33 1-3 or 16 2-3 pounds each.

Long handles then are an advantage, as far as the lifting force is concerned.

They have still another advantage. With the short handles, the slant from the hands to the axles is sharp. The force used in moving the barrow is exerted along this slant and about one-fourth of it is wasted in shoving about the wheel into the ground. The other three-fourths is what moves the barrow ahead. With the long handles the slant is less sharp; therefore more of the moving force is used to move the barrow and less is wasted in shoving the wheel deeper into the ground.

Long handles then are an advantage, as to lifting force and also as to moving force.

In using a pitchfork one hand works twice as hard as the other.

How much force does each hand exert? A forkful of hay weighs about 15 pounds. The left hand being in the middle, the right hand must push down with a force of 15 pounds to balance the weight of the hay. The left hand lifts against the weight of the hay 15 pounds, and against the downward push of the right hand 15 pounds more, or 30 pounds altogether. The right hand shoves downward 15 pounds and the left hand lifts 30 pounds, and therefore the left hand exerts twice the force that the right hand does. As a matter of fact the left hand does a little more than this, because it lifts the weight of the fork, which amounts to about three pounds more.

When the hay is lifted up and carried with the fork in a vertical position each hand will carry half the weight, or the left hand will be used just to steady the fork and the right hand to carry it all, 15 pounds of hay and three pounds of fork.

SORE SHOULDERS ON THE HORSES

By G. H. Glover, D. V. S., Colorado Agricultural College.

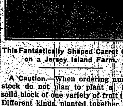
With the beginning of spring the horses are put into collars for hard work. The shoulders and the neck will be tender and, as usual, the horse in every respect will be in poor condition to go into the hard work of the soft fields so suddenly. He has probably not been grained much in preparation for his task of putting in the spring crop. His body is covered with a heavy winter coat, which causes him to perspire easily. The first farm work in the spring is the hardest of the year, and at this time a horse is in the poorest condition to do the work without injury to himself. The shoulders, the neck, and the back become bruised and sore.

Too much care cannot be exercised in seeing that the collar is a perfect fit. A collar which is too large is more likely to injure the horse than one that is too small. The collar should be scraped each morning and carefully cleaned before it is again put on the horse. Before the spring work begins, it is well to oil the harness and have it soft and pliable. For the first few days of hard work on soft ground, the shoulders of the horse should be bathed in cold water every night after the harness is removed. The horse will be very sore and tired for a few days and should be given every kind attention. Watch the harness to see that the draft is at right angles with the shoulders. If it is too low, the collar will be constantly "kicking up" at the top and the horse will soon have a sore neck. If the draft is too high, the collar will not rest securely on the lower part of the shoulder, where the horse is best prepared to throw his weight. If there are any calloused lumps on the horse's shoulders or back, they should be carefully removed during the winter when his services are not much needed. If the collar is put on over one of those "sit fasts," it will have the same result as a man trying to walk with a button in his shoe or a bunion on his foot.

This story is not for the purpose of suggesting treatment for bruised shoulders and sore neck, but just simply to remind you that an ounce of prevention (by having the horse and the harness in good condition) is often worth pounds of cure later on when the horse is disabled and you are deprived of his services, for weeks, right in the busy season.

THE HUMAN CARROT

One of the Freaks of Nature.



This Fantastically Shaped Carrot Grew on a Jersey Island Farm.

A Caution.—When ordering nursery stock do not plan to plant a large solid block of one variety of fruit trees. Different kinds, planted together, help to fertilize each other's blossoms. Alternate the varieties by planting double rows of each kind, side by side. Remember that some varieties are self-sterile and cannot fruit well when planted alone. We've said this before, but it's a vital point that can't be repeated too often.

Would Spoil the Eggs.—Kerosene is one of the most effective and cheapest common insect exterminators that we have. It kills what it touches. In using it in nests at this season be careful that it does not come in contact with eggs intended for hatching. Oil of any kind on the shell will kill the egg embryo.

The Fire Dutchman

By DON MARK LEMON

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

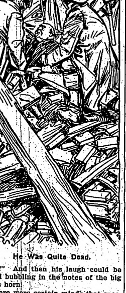
He was known as the Fire Dutchman, a nickname that he had justly earned by attending every fire of any consequence that had occurred in the city for a period of ten years. He was a fat little man, who had taken to heart literally the Biblical injunction: Let thy answer be always yea and nay, and no more, only he pronounced it, yah and nine.

But though he was not given to much speech, the little man had a laugh that continually welled up from his heart to his broad felt hat. It was mellow and bubbling, rich and warm, and sweet as a boiling pot of maple syrup. It seemed always sun-up in the little Dutchman's heart, and never sun-down.

Years before, when he first began regularly to attend every fire of any consequence, the firemen and police had sought to move him along as a nuisance, for he would get as close to the flames as flesh and blood dare get, while he invariably brought with him a big brass horn mounted on bicycle wheels, and during the progress of the fire he would blow the horn softly and musically.

But after a time the men grew to liking him about—his music was soothing and cheering by turn, and the superstition got to be accredited that this melody somehow checked the flames, and luck was always with the firemen while the little Fire Dutchman continued to blow on his great horn.

"Yah," he would say; "moosic iss goot to but out der vire mit! Yah? nine?" And then his laugh could be heard bubbling in the notes of the big brass horn.



He Was Quite Dead.

There were certain minds that speculated about this assertion of the little Dutchman. Perhaps fire could be checked with music. Fire is but one form of energy or activity, and music has power to soothe and quiet. Could the Fire Dutchman be an inventive genius who was slowly perfecting a new fire extinguisher?

A certain horn was said to have blown down a certain wall in Biblical times—might not the Dutchman's horn blow down a wall of fire?

"Humph!" exclaimed the skeptical. "He is only a crazy Dutchman whose musical bump is excited by heat and flame."

"Perhaps so, and we will dismiss the fire-extinguishing theory," conceded the speculative. "But yet you must have noticed that there are strange notes in his playing. May it not be possible that his horn and not his brain has chords that are excited by fire? For instance, there is the aeolian harp, that the wind makes music on. May not his horn be a thing that fire and heat can make music on? He may not blow into the horn at all, but merely seem to, and what we hear may be music made by the heat energy of the fire affecting some delicate instrument concealed in the horn. Heat melody, as it were, or fire translated into song."

"Humph!" again exclaimed the skeptical. "He's got a little sausage factory up at his house, and he may have brains enough to translate man's best friend into sausages, but never fire into song. Take my advice, friend, and buy your gasoline at some other garage."

But whatever the world thought about him, nothing seemed to affect the little Fire Dutchman save fire itself. That baked him brown and browner, till he grew to resemble one of his own smoked sausages. The wonder was he kept so fat, with the moisture toasted out of his body every few days at some fire, but the spring of laughter undefiled in his heart may have had something to do with the matter.

The pitcher that goes too oft to the well is at last broken, and the little Fire Dutchman who ran too often to fires was at last killed. A wall toppled on him and his horn at a great fire one night in a downtown wholesale district, and when they got to him he was quite dead.

They took him up and bore him away in his horn. "The little Fire Dutchman is dead—in a horn!" the burly policemen jested, ashamed to confess their personal grief at the sad accident.

After the funeral, which was attended by every fireman who could get off duty, a gentleman who had taken a deep interest in the disposal made of the horn called on the widow of the little Fire Dutchman and offered to purchase the sausage shop.

The sum he offered was so considerable that the widow turned the place over to him the following day, and moved her personal belongings into other quarters.

Immediately the gentleman went on a tour of investigation and found that all the machinery used in the making of sausages on the premises was run by electric power. But yet there was no electric plant on the premises, and no wires leading into the house.

Again the gentleman examined the crushed horn that the little Fire Dutchman for a period of ten years had carried to every fire of any consequence that had occurred in the city. Ah! could he rediscover the principle of the delicate, broken mechanism concealed in the horn?

If so, then with capital to back him, a vast fortune was at his command. For here was the means of translating into electric energy the untold heat-power lost every year beyond recovery in the innumerable fires that ravage towns and cities, and which, until the little Fire Dutchman had hit upon his invention, no man had thought of utilizing.

MONARCH A MAN OF TACT.

Quality of King Edward That Has Made Him Many Friends.

The tact of King Edward has endeared him in the hearts of people outside of England as well as to his own subjects. One of the attendants of a foreign court describes a recent visit of the British monarch and the impression he made. The teller of the story is an old lady who has lived at the court since her youth.

"The king came. He smiled, he beamed, he was like the sun, he made us all feel that we were beautiful and wonderful, and yet there was no flattery. We all fell in love with him from the moment he kissed our queen's hand.

"He not only said nice things, but he did nice things. He thought of everybody and we never felt that his charming speeches and attentions came from the idea, 'It is the tactful thing to do.' No, it all come from his heart.

"One evening there was a great function at the palace. We had been standing for nearly two hours. Our own queen is most kind and considerate in these matters, but the visit of the English king was such an honor, such a success, that it made her quite forgetful. She forgot to sit down herself or to give the order to us poor ladies in attendance. I am getting old, and King Edward saw my distress. He was walking about talking to everybody. Suddenly he stopped in front of me and said:

"'Duchess, you must sit down. I see you are worn out by standing so long. Sit down, if only for a few moments. I will stand in front of you so that no one shall see.'

"The dear, kind man was as good as his word. By and by he went up to our queen. What he said I do not know, but she sat down and gave the signal with her fan, which means that we ladies can also sit.

"I say that a man, whether he is king or a peasant, who thinks of the little things can take care of the big things, too."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OATMEAL WITH STRONG FLAVOR.

Sailor's Idea of Why It Is So Popular in Scotland.

"No wonder the Scots are so fond of oatmeal. They put booze in it," said the sailor.

"Nonsense," the druggist expostulated.

"It's a fact. Wunst, in Peebles—" He gave a loud laugh.

"Wunst in Peebles, Hal, I called on a sick great-aunt of mine, a preacher's wife. My dawg O'Brien was with me.

"Aunt was settin' up in bed eatin' gruel when I come in, and I noticed a smell of the old stuff about, but nacherly said nothin' out of politeness.

"The old lady put down her basin of gruel on the floor to talk to me, and O'Brien disappeared under the bed.

"Arter finishing our talk, I got up to git. But my eye fell on the gruel basin, and I turned purple. It was empty, and that swab of an O'Brien lay asleep beside it.

"I apologized to aunt the best I knowed how. She took the dawg's crime in good part. She says with a laugh:

"'Call him out,' she says. 'Let's have a look,' she says, 'at this here dawg what likes gruel so. He must be,' she says, 'an Aberdeen or a Scotch collie.'

"'Come out here, O'Brien!' says I.

"O'Brien opened his eyes in a lazy way. He got half up, then down he flopped on his side and fell asleep again.

"'O'Brien!' I yelled.

"He got up, staggered a couple of yards, then keeled over and started snorin'.

"'Drunk? Well, say, I had to carrry him in my arms all the way back to the hotel!"

Sees Great Future for Boston.

Judge Lloyd E. Chamberlain, president of the Massachusetts board of trade, in a speech recently declared that Boston could be made the leading commercial city of the world. "It is America's nearest seaport to Europe by 150 miles," he said, "and the possibility lies through the construction of an inland waterway from Albemarle, N. C., to Boston. To do this you must reopen and enlarge the Carroll-Albemarle canal, thus connecting the Chesapeake bay; reopen and enlarge the Delaware bay; reopen and enlarge the Delaware and Raritan canal, connecting with the Raritan bay. Then you may go across New York harbor, through Long Island sound, until you get to Narragansett bay. The last step is the construction of the Taunton river-Brocton Fore river-Quincy canal, and the problem is solved."

BACKACHE IS KIDNEYACHE.

Usually There Are Other Troubles to Prove It.

Pain in the back is pain in the kidneys, in most cases, and it points to the need of a special remedy to relieve and cure the congestion or inflammation of the kidneys that is interfering with their work and causing that pain that makes you say: "Oh, my back."

Thompson Watkins, professional nurse, 420 N. 23d St., Parsons, Kans., says: "For some time I was annoyed with sharp twinges across the small of my back and irregular passages of the kidney secretions. Since using Doan's Kidney Pills I am free from these troubles."

Disease Cured by Cuticura.

"My six year old daughter had the dreadful disease called hives for two months. She became affected by playing with children who had it. By scratching she caused large sores which were irritating. Her body was a complete sore but it was worse on her arms and back. We employed a physician who left medicine but it did not help her and I tried several remedies but without avail. Seeing the Cuticura Remedies advertised, I thought I would try them. I gave her a hot bath daily with Cuticura Soap and anointed her body with Cuticura Ointment. The first treatment relieved the itching and in a short time the disease disappeared. Mrs. George L. Fridhoff, Warren, Mich., June 30 and July 13, 1908."

The Safest Place.

"Yes, sir, I'm giving you straight goods," remarked the automobile manufacturer to a man who was looking over his latest models with a view to purchasing. "We are putting on the market the very best motor car that brains and money can produce, and we are not afraid to stand right back of every machine we send out."

"Well," drawled the prospective customer thoughtfully, as he walked slowly around the car, "I shouldn't wonder a mite if that was safer than standing in front of the plaguey things."

MARK OF A THOROUGHBRED.

He Will Keep Going When a Common Horse Will Quit.

As an old horseman who has bred and handled horses of many types, says a writer in Outing, I have frequently been surprised at the answers given by the majority of people when asked the question: "What constitutes the most striking differences between the thoroughbred and the common horse?"

Nineteen out of twenty will name the beauty or the speed of the thoroughbred; but important as are both of these qualities, neither answer is correct. It is simply that the thoroughbred when he is tired will keep on with an undiminished courage and ambition, while a common horse under the same circumstances will quit.

LESS MEAT

Advice of Family Physician.

Formerly people thought meat necessary for strength and muscular vigor.

The man who worked hard was supposed to require meat two or three times a day. Science has found out differently.

It is now a common thing for a family physician to order less meat, as in the following letter from a N. Y. man.

"I had suffered for years with dyspepsia and nervousness. My physician advised me to eat less meat and greasy foods generally. I tried several things to take the place of my usual breakfast of chops, fried potatoes, etc., but got no relief until I tried Grape-Nuts food.

"After using Grape-Nuts for the cereal part of my meals for two years, I am now a well man. Grape-Nuts benefited my health far more than the $500.00 worth of medicine I had taken before.

"My wife and children are healthier than they had been for years, and we are a very happy family, largely due to Grape-Nuts.

"We have been so much benefited by Grape-Nuts that it would be ungrateful not to acknowledge it."

PREVENTING PAINT TROUBLES.

It's easy enough to recognize the symptoms of poor paint, after it has been on awhile—after its inherent tendency to crack and peel and scale and blister, etc., has developed into trouble. You know these paint "diseases" usually indicate adulteration or substitution in the paint materials. And you know the only remedy is re-painting.

A little knowledge of paint and painting requirements, and how to made sure of the purity and quality of materials, would prevent all trouble, and save the big extra expense of re-painting; just as a proper knowledge of simple health-laws, and observance of them, prevents sickness.

A complete painting guide, including a book of color schemes, specifications for all kinds of painting work, and an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint materials, with directions for using it, can be had free by writing National Lead Co., 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49.

A very simple guide in the purchase of white lead (the only sure and safe paint material) is the famous "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark; that trademark is an absolute guarantee of purity and quality.

WOMAN AND HOME

TO UTILIZE CORNER

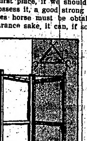
WHERE CUPBOARD ACCOMMODATION IS SHORT.

Excellent Substitute for Expensive Wardrobe That Is Cheap and Takes Up Little Space in Room—The Details.

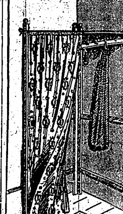
In many rooms, and especially so in bed-sitting rooms, which so many business girls occupy, sufficient cupboard accommodation for hanging up clothes is often lacking, and the sketches we give illustrate an ingenious way in which a corner of a room may be utilized for this purpose.

The business girl of limited means and whose circumstances, perhaps, compel her to live in a bed-sitting room, and to whom the purchase of an expensive wardrobe is out of the question, will find the temporary "cupboard" easy to arrange, and the cost very small. It has this advantage, also, that when it is not required. it can be taken down in a few moments, and the articles used for its construction folded up and packed away into a very small space.

In the first place, if we should not already possess it, a good strong two-fold clothes horse must be obtained. For appearance sake, it can, if so desired, be painted or stained, and then arranged in the corner of the room in the manner shown in Fig. 1. Small brass hooks are screwed into the two upper bars, and little hooks, somewhat similar but of a rather larger size than those used for hanging up cups on a dresser, will answer the purpose. At the top of the two upright posts, on either side, a small hole is made, and into this hole a brass rod is fitted, on which a curtain may be hung.



A, in Fig. 1, indicates the rod placed in position, and when this has been done, the framework of the cupboard is practically complete. For the roof, a hanging triangular piece of stout canvas should be cut to fit, and bound at the edges with braid, and then tapes sewn on at each point.



The little diagram B at the top right-hand corner of Fig. 2 explains this. The tapes are then tied round the tops of the posts, and the canvas stretched tightly across, and if cut carefully to fit, will keep out all dust and dirt.

One curtain can be made to pull entirely across, or with a little extra trouble, two can be made to divide in the middle, and will be found more convenient than the one curtain.

In a cupboard of this kind, not only will a good deal of accommodation for clothes be found, but also a valuable little space on the floor will be enclosed in which boots, shoes, slippers and other unsightly things can be stored that may not, for a time, be required.

NEW COLORS AND NEW NAMES.

Astonishing Variety to Be at Command This Season.

The coming season has been heralded as a season of color. There are some new shades, and many new names seem to multiply day by day.

There is sand brown, very near the old camel color. It comes in a range of shades, from light to dark.

There is another color, not widely different, known as gravel. It has even a wider range of tones.

The most popular of the taupes and smoke grays and those which are the most becoming have the slightest reddish cast.

The Thames gray is a variation of taupe, with more warmth than is usually found in taupe.

The color known as lichen is gray with green in it. It is one of the cleverest of the faint, subtle colorings of nature.

Then there is wood rose and Niagara, and framboise, which is like the flame-colored azaleas, red, with yellow and a flame suggestion.

Very many of the browns have a hint of gold in their make-up.

Somehow the colorings are vivid, many of them without being garish.

Gifts for Bride-Elect.

For a bride-elect her bevy of friends arranged to purchase appropriate articles, one for each month of her first year. For January there was a good cook book with all verses apropos the need of just such a book in the household. February is a good month when a woman likes to make fancy work, so the little handkerchief bag was filled with the trifles needed in the work-basket. March brought out a fan, of course, April was suggestive of house-cleaning, and the kitchen apron, bar of soap and dustpan were very appropriate articles. So these gifts were all cleverly arranged, and while there was not an expensive article among them they provided a happy surprise.

The Toilet Table

Fruit stains upon the hands may be removed by rubbing with the juice of tomatoes.

When one is dressed and it is inconvenient to wash the face an excellent lotion to have is five cents' worth of boracic acid dissolved in ten cents' worth of alcohol. This is perfectly harmless and by rubbing the skin well with this, applied with a handkerchief, every pore will be cleansed, and you will look and feel as well as if you had used the best soap and water. This is almost indispensable when traveling.

A poultice of witch hazel is often soothing to a muscular pain and is simply made. In a small saucepan put a square folded flannel cloth. Pour over this enough witch hazel to thoroughly moisten it; heat and place the flannel cloth over the pain. Cover it with a dry flannel and pin a towel over it to keep it in place.

Roumanian Embroidery.

The French dressmakers are doing all sorts of clever things with Roumanian embroideries. These are very brilliant in tone and semi-barbaric in design.

They are used on hats, on frocks, on blouses and coat suits. They make very smart waistcoats, revers and pocket flaps on serge and broadcloth coat suits.

They are widely used on evening cloaks. The latter word is now widely revived and everything that was a wrap is now a cloak.

GIVES APPEARANCE OF LENGTH.

Attractive New Arrangement for the Separate Waist.

There is always more or less difficulty encountered when one tries to combine a high-waisted skirt with a separate blouse to give a one-piece effect, or, at least, to get away from the appearance of the waist and odd skirt. When the skirt is brought two inches or more above the formerly accepted waist demarcation then the figure is apt to look cut off or out of proportion. This is not the case when the gown is all of one material or color.

In one of the new models length is obtained by the arrangement of the front of the waist, which introduces a sort of veil. This is of lace strapped across at intervals with narrow velvet ribbon bands, each one ornamented with a miniature copy of the belt buckle. Bordering the vest is a Greek key design, done in soutache braid. This extends around the bottom of the waist, where it shows above the silk girdle. The style is excellent for an afternoon gown and where one is possessed of a practically good cloth skirt to be kept for ordinary street wear, it would be an excellent idea to bestow upon it quite a modern touch by adding the crushed belt of silk to match the cloth and having the waist made of chiffon cloth or some soft silk of the same shade.

Ways and Means.

The new tendency in style renders necessary a number of little makeshifts that are interesting, such as stiffening the bottom of the long stole or one side of a diagonal drapery, running a bit of canvas in the hem at one side of the skirt in order that the one may hang straight in contrast with the soft folds into which the other naturally falls on account of its own weight; weighting the hem of skirts, tabs or drapery corners; constructing a lining corset instead of having an entire lining; wiring instead of boning the stock, and utilizing elastic bands to secure the extremely close-fitting effect that is required in the long sleeves.

A round skirt with the side plaits on either side has just been launched.

Thousands of country people know that in time of sudden mishap or accident Hamlins Wizard Oil is the best substitute for the family doctor. That is why it is so often found upon the shelf.

People who try to stand prosperity are foolish. They should sit down and take it easy.

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY
1902 Trinity Building, New York

is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product, has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the appoval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed, because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States, in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

Rev. Philip A. Schwarz, jr., until recently pastor of the Presbyterian church of Red Lake Falls, left last evening for his new field of labor at Eveleth, Minn. Mr. Schwarz resigned the pastorate of the local church a few weeks ago to accept a call to the church at Eveleth which he had had under consideration since last fall. A reception in honor of Mr. Schwarz was held at the church parlors Monday evening. A large number of people were present and the affair was a social sucess, giving fitting expression to the high esteem in which Mr. Schwarz is held by the people of the city and vicinity. Mrs. Thos. Germo presented Mr. Schwarz with a water set, the gift of friends, expreessing appropriate sentiments and wishes for the fruitfulness of the future labors of Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Schwarz responded to the sentiments in a pleasing manner.

Building Railroads.

Settlers living between the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers east of this city are very much excited these days. For the past several days railroad surveyors have been at work running lines in this section. The surveyors are not giving out any information but the settlers are doing all kinds of speculating. At first it was thought that the surveyors were laying out the new Thief River Falls-Duluth line, but of late there is a rumor in circulation that the Great Northern is going to build a line from Thief River Falls to connect with the Fosston extension of the Duluth line. Only one thing seems to be certain, and that is that the surveyors are at work in this territory. This report is brought to the city by numerous settlers.—Thief River Falls News.

We have pretty reliable informaion to the effect that the "surveying crews" mentioned in the above are a number of local parties who were engaged in outlining routes for several new ditches which are to be put in between the rivers. In fact some of the petitions for these ditches have already been drawn during the past few days. A thorough system of drainage will do more for that particular territiry than a railroad would at present, and it is not at all likely that any new railroad will be surveyed through the country until the land is made productive enough to give the railroad some business. The drainage projects now coming up are sure enough the best measure to increase the value of the lands.—Plummer [illegible]

Indisputable Evidence.

The case of Peter Lusher was called. The judge, having asked him if he had employed counsel and receiving the reply that he had not, appointed a recent graduate of an eastern law school to defend him.

Lusher, a cowboy, was charged with having fired a shot at the conductor of a freight train with intent to kill. The conductor had put him off the train, passengers not being carried on freight trains. While the conductor was climbing back on to a car Lusher fired the shot. A brakeman came up behind him and held him till other employees of the road gathered round, took him in charge and at the next town turned him over to the police.

Another cowboy, Shattuck, a pal of Lusher, was on a rear car of the same train. He testified that he and Lusher were traveling together; that they were accustomed to travel on freight trains; that on such occasions they usually separated in order to attract less attention, and that if one were put off a train the other fired a shot from his revolver as a signal of the fact to the other, who then left the train. Lusher, backed by this testimony, claimed that instead of shooting with intent to injure the conductor he was merely giving the usual signal to Shattuck, who was on one of the rear cars.

There was no one in court, including the prisoner's counsel, who did not consider this plea very farfetched. The case looked bad for Lusher, for if convicted of trying to kill the conductor he could not hope for a less sentence than five years at hard labor in the penitentiary. When the jury was about to retire the prisoner said to the judge:

"Your honor, does any one yere think that I've been goin' around with two revolvers at my hips for ten years for nothin'. D'ye suppose I couldn't hit the man's body if I wanted to? All I ask is for the court to be adjourned outside and I'll show what tomfoolery this yere trial is."

There was something so convincing in this argument that the judge adjourned the court, and judge, attorneys, jury and spectators, lighting cigars, went out into the courthouse yard to find out why the cowboy missed the conductor.

The prisoner's pal, Shattuck, consented to be shot at. Lusher borrowed a quarter from the judge, inserting its lower edge between his friend's thumb and forefinger, stood off twenty paces and sent the coin spinning in the air without bringing a drop of blood to Shattuck's fingers. The coin happened to fall at the feet of the judge, who picked it up and, noticing its battered appearance, remarked audibly:

"By thunder!"

Lusher next procured a thread and, tying a walnut to one end of it, put the other end in Shattuck's hand, who held the nut suspended. Lusher walked away from his mark, counting forty paces, turned and before the spectators realized that he had raised his pistol cracked the nut.

There were more exclamations. Lusher then tied a stone to the thread and from the same distance as he had cracked the nut cut the thread at the middle.

By this time it began to look as if, had Lusher been vindictive toward the conductor, he could have cut off an ear, darkened an eye or put a ball through the center of his heart without half trying. Some one suggested as much, but Lusher declared that if he was to be vindicated he wanted the vindication to be satisfactory and proceeded with the exhibition. Borrowing a hunting watch from a juryman, he opened the case, which was highly polished and would serve for a reflector. Pointing to a break in the bark of a tree about two inches in diameter, he walked twenty paces from it and, still keeping his back toward it, caught the target's reflection in the watch case, fired over his shoulder and put a bullet in the improvised mark.

At this the spectators cried, "Acquit him!" The judge ordered the jury back into the courtroom, and as they were proceeding thither the prisoner cut a hole in each of their hats without scratching a head.

"You quit that," cried the foreman angrily, "or you'll get ten years!"

When court was resumed and the jury had been charged the foreman spoke a few words to the jury in a low tone, then arose and said:

"Your honor, the jury finds that the defendant is not guilty of attempting to kill the plaintiff. Furthermore, if he had intended to kill the plaintiff he could have shot off his fingers and toes separately, chipping off pieces of him till there was nothing left but his heart to keep on beating. Furthermore, it wouldn't be safe to convict him unless he's unarmed and no weapon within ten miles, for he could kill every mother's son of us before we could get him under."

"The prisoner is discharged," said the judge, following the verdict with remarkable activity, and, stepping down from the bench, he took the precaution to grasp the cowboy's hand fervently that he might make peace with him before he had a chance to shoot. Every man in the courtroom insured his own safety by following the judge's example. Last of all came the conductor, who told the acquitted man that whenever he and his friend wished to ride on his train to step right into the caboose and if he would notify him a sumptuous lunch would be provided. NORMAL SCHOOL BILL IS VETOED

Bill Will Probably not be Passed Over Governor's Veto.

Governor Johnson Tuesday afternoon voted the bill establishing a normal school at Cass Lake. There is little probability that the bill will be passed over the gvernor's veto, for the bill passed the house and senate by very small majorities.

In his message the governor says that the northern part of the state is well equipped with normal schools, and that the population does not warrant it. He suggests that the better plan is to increase the facilities of the normal schools at St. Cloud, Moorhead and Duluth rather than establish another school at Cass Lake. A further objection to Cass Lake is offered in the fact that the population there is not large enough to warrant sufficient attendance for the model department, which is a necessity of every normal school. The governor also stated that the present financial condition of the state is not such as to warrant the establishment of the school; that in view of the great demands made upon the public treasury, we ought to proceed very slowly in the direction of further new public institutions.

It Sure Am So.

It seems to us that the Thief River Falls papers are indulging in some rather childish play these days. Their little slurs against Red Lake Falls are entirely uncalled for. Because one man resigns his job and leaves town is no reason that the whole town is on the road to the eternal bow wows. Men may come and men may go, but the town will remain, and carry out its work just the same. The idea that Red Lake Falls would be cut off with practically no railroad facilities is also ridiculous. The state will see to it that each town has efficient railroad service. Thief River would no doubt like to have the county seat, but such childish tactics do not recommend it very highly for the honor.—Greenbush Journal.

SMALL HIGH SCHOOLS.

Students from Small Cities and Villages do Good Work.

Information from E. B. Pierce, registrar at the State University is to the effect that thirty-five freshmen in the college of science, literature and the arts were dismissed from the University at the end of the first semester for deficiency in scholarship. Of these eleven were from preparatory schools outside of Minnesota, eighteen were from the shools of the twin cities and six were from the schools of the smaller cities and villages of the state. This is an excellent showing for the students from the country and for the schools of the state, but it must be taken into consideration that the ttendance of graduates from the city schools is large and that the temptations of country students to slight their work are not so great. Most of the country students attend school at great financial sacrifice to their parents or themselves and for that reason are impelled to make good use of their time and opportunities.

Going into Court!

At the meeting of the board of county commissioners held Tuesday, an attempt was made to redistrict the county into new commissioners districts. The only change that was made was that the towns dividedd by the Red Lake river were placed in the Third commissioner district which is at present represented by Commissioner Aubol. The matter will at once be taken into the court.—Thief River News.

Mr. Schwarz was formerly pastor at Windom but came north on his summer vacations for the benefit of his health with the result that he has since made his home permanently in northern Minnesota. Senator A. D. Stephens of Crookston has intrdouced a bill providing for an absolute revolution in Minnesota's form of government.

The bill provides that the membership of the sentate shall be cut down to fifteen and the house to thirty, both houses to be in continuous session, and the members to draw salaries of from $3,000 to $3,500 a year.

MAYOR DUFFY FAVORS

Thinks Franchise Should Be Granted with Conditions Regarding Rate Regulations.

When interviewed by The Gazette Mayor Duffy expressed the opinion that favorable action ought to be taken on the request of the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company for a long term franchise. He did not state that the city ought to accept the proposition exacty as made by the company, but is of the opinion that the request for a long term franchise is reasonable. He believes that if a long term franchise is granted the electric light company people will be in a position to accomplish something and that they should have the opportunity to do anything they desire that may be beneficial to the city. He is of the opinion that the city has much to gain and little to lose in considerinng the request favorably.

He would have restrictions regarding the making of rates and believes that the city should have the privilege of fixing maximum rates for ligting every five or ten years. While the rates now in effect are fair, they might be too high five or ten years later, owing to improvements in electrical appliances in years to come, or for other reasons, and the right to regulate rates ought not to be contracted away.

FOR A GREATER RED LAKE FALLS

Reasons for Request for Long Term Franchise Set Forth.

President Johnson of Electric Company Tells of Plans for Development.

There seems to be some misapprehension regarding the franchise asked for by the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company from the city of Red Lake Falls, and it is no more than fair to the people of the city as well as to the electric light company that the provisions of the proposed franchise be fully set forth.

It is well to bear in mind, in the first place, that the new franchise has nothing to do with the contract the company recently made with the city to light the streets and furnish light to individual patrons. The franchise granted a few weeks ago for this purpose settles this matter for five years and the additional franchise now asked for does not interfere with the terms of the former contract nor gives the electric light company larger powers thereunder.

A carefnl consideration of the request of the electric light company discloses these points:

The company asks for a thirty-five year franchise for the privilege of erecting poles and wires for the purpose of transmitting power and light through the streets of Red Lake Falls.

The franchise is not exclusive. In fact the people of the city, in voting for this franchise, simply give the company the right to sell its power and light to its customers, and the same right may be granted to any other person or corporation desiring the privilege.

The benefits to the city by granting the franchise are manifold. It means that manufacturing plants will be more easily obtained when they can be assured of electric power for a long term of years, and without the franchise the electric company could not enter into a contract to supply power or light for a period beyond the expiration of the present five-year franchise.

A flour mill, a flax fiber factory, or a manufacturing plant of any kind means an investment of $100,000 and the question of adequate power at a fair price is the most important proposition entering into the location and establishment of a manufacturing business. The promoter of a big institution is not satisfied with a contract for power for six months or a year or five years. In the larger cities power contracts are entered into just as ground leases are made--for twenty, fifty and even ninety-nine years. The length of the power contract enters largely in determining the value of the stocks and bonds of the concern, and a manufacturing company with a short term power contract is at a decided disadvantage, because of the uncertainty as to the terms of renewal.

It is evident, then, that in order for the electric light company to enter into long term contracts it must have the assurance that the city will give it the privilege of maintaining its poles and wires and furnishing the power required by the contract.

It would seem that the electric company should be given full opportunity to place itself in position to make such long-time contracts with manufacturing industries that want to locate here, and unless the company can do so, it is impossible that we can secure an enterprise worth while.

In speaking of the proposed franchise, Marcus Johnson, president of the electric light company, who has always had at heart the welfare of Red Lake Falls, tells the Gazette:

"A thirty-five year franchise for the transmission of power, is not an unusual request; rather it is the only kind of franchise that would answer our purpose. If the franchise is granted, we expect to spend a great deal of money at once in perfecting our plant in order to handle the increased volume of business it is hoped to secure. We could not afford to make these improvements if a short time franchise was granted, as it will be years before we can hope to get enough business to pay the cost of installing the plant.

Furthermore, manufacturing enterprises will not come to Red Lake Falls unless we can promise them power at a reasonable price for a long term of years.

I have already had several inquiries as to the desirability of Red Lake Falls as a manufacturing point, and in one instance the promoter told me he could not consider a location where a power contract for at least fifteen years could not be made. In another case I was told that the company would want a contract for twenty-five years.

"Under our present franchise we cannot make a contract for more than four full years. This is not satisfactory to any prospective enterprise, and further, as I have stated, we could not afford to install a modern power plan if we are obliged to seek renewal of our franchise every five years.

"One of the first benefits to the people of Red Lake Falls would be the installation of a twenty-four hour service. This would enable the blacksmith shops, the printing office, the creamery and other small manufacturing enterprises to install motors and have a safe, cheap and dependable power.

"Our company has no idea of transmitting power away from town. We expect to use the plant for the betterment of local enterprises and make a greater Red Lake Falls. We want to be entirely fair to the people of Red Lake Falls, and do not intend running a single wire out of the city.

"It ought to be borne in mind that we are not in any sense asking for an exclusive franchise. We want only the privilege of putting in the plant and of being in position to sell our power. The granting of the franchise will not prevent the establishment of another power plant, nor a dozen for that matter. It would put us in a position to make long contracts, and to get for Red Lake Falls something it needs—some desirable manufacturing establishment."

After a careful consideration of the merits of the proposition we cannot find much room for controversy. The electric light company is asking only that it be given opportunity to increase its business and at the same time be of assistance to the city in trying to interest outside capital to locate here by offering reasonable rates, and to give them the reasonable length of contract absolutely necessary to the establishment of this kind of industries.

We are all interested in the growth and development of the town. Let us put no stone in the way of those who want to help us grow and prosper. Any other course is short-sighted and unwise.

GOOD SEED WHEAT

How to Select, Clean and Test Seed Wheat—Advise from Good Authority.

Selection of wheat seed: Select bright, mature, heavy weight seed, preferably that which has been grown in your own state rather than imported and unacclimated seed. Preferance should be given to the standard varieties of Fife and Blue Stem as they are sure to command the best price. By giving careful attention to the selection of seed and the cultivation of the soil of the yields Fife and Blue Stem can be increased, and the best quality of grain secured

Use of wheat, grader and fanning mill: Where the wheat grader is available it should be used to screen out the small size kernels. Where the grader is not available, use the fannnig mill. The larger kernels, as a rule, come from the larger and more productive wheat heads, and hence the seed wheat grader and fanning mill have a tendency to remove the smaller, less mature and less productive kernels. The heavy weight seed contain the most nourishment and reserve plant food which give the young wheat plants a better start in the early spring than in the case of light weight seed.

Testing germinating power: The germinating power of the seed can be tested by planting in moist sand or dirt a given number of seeds and determinting the number which germinate, or the seed can be germinated between moist pieces of blotting paper or cloth. If there is any reason to doubt the vitality of the seed the germinating power should be tested.

Formalin treatment of seed to kill smut spores: After the wheat is cleaned, it is an excellent plan to give the seed the formalin treatment to kill the smut spores. One pound of formalin is dissolved in fifty gallons of water, and the seed is either sprinkled with this solution or immersed in it for fifteen to thirty minutes. As the wheat absorbs water allowance should be made for increase in weight and bulk when seeding.

Rate of seeding: The amount of seed to use per acre should vary to a slight extent with the size of the kernels. The larger the kernels the heavier the rate of seeding so as to secure the requisite number of strong, vigorous wheat plants per acre. When the wheat is well cleaned, there is some compensation in that there is a higher germintaing power. If the seeding is late and backward, a little more seed should be used than in early spring when better conditions exist for stooling. There is a tendency to use too scant rather than too much seed, but an excess is unnecessary. Usually about 85 pounds per acre of plump, well cleaned heavy weight seed will give best results.

Increase in yield: The North Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, and other Agricultural Experiment Stations have demonstrated that selected heavy weight seeds produce stronger plants and more and better grain than light wheat seed. It is reasonable to expect an increase in yield of from one to three bushels per acre as well as grain of better quality by carefully selecting and screening the seed wheat. It will pay you to do so. Will Build Line.

Erie Eleven Towns: The board of directors of the Red Lake-Eastern Marshall Farmers Telephone compnny held a business meeting at this office on Tuesday and a large amount of business was transacted. The line was divided up into sections and apportioned to the directors who are to see about getting the poles scattered along the line and erected as soon as possible, so that the line can be put in working order as early as the weather will permit. To all those who are going around telling that the line will not be built this summer, we wish to infrm them that it will be and the sooner they turn in and help the better.

LEO GAMACHE DEAD.

Family of Joseph Gamache Sorely Afflicted.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gamache and family have the sympathy of the people of the city in the affilication that has come to them. In the month of February the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Gamache died and last week another son, Leo, aged fourteen, passed away, and in addition to these losses two other sons have been dangerously ill within the past two months. It is not often that people are called upon to pass through such crushing bereavement as has been their's.

Leo Gamache died early Friday morning after a brief illness with scarlet fever. Funeral services were held from St. Joseph's church, of which deceased was a member, at 10 o'clock Friday morning, Rev. Fr. Pichery officiating.

Train and Track.

Belgium has been offering reduced rates under certain conditions for travel on its passenger trains, and the change has resulted in enormously increased business and revenues.

The new subway through the heart of Boston's shopping district is the most expensive mile of underground railroad in the world, having cost, with equipment, about $10,000,000 to build.

Upon their completion, in the near future, the New York Central railroad's freight yards near Buffalo will, it is claimed, be the largest in the country, with a capacity for handling 26,500 cars a day.

Law Points.

A manufacturing company is held in Victor versus Louise Cotton mills (N. C.), 61 S. E. 648; 16 L. R. A. (N. S.), 1020, to have no implied power to insure the life of its president and carry the policy after he has retired from office.

A person who refuses to obey an order which the court has no power to make is held in McHenry versus state (Miss.), 44 So., 831; 16 L. R. A. (N. S.), 1062, not to be guilty of contempt, even though the court has general jurisdiction over the proceedings in which the order is made.

The old fashioned way of dosing a weak stomach, or stimulating the heart or kidneys is all wrong. Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. This is why his prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed entirely to the cause of these ailments, the weak inside or controlling nerves. It isn't so difficult, says Dr. Shoop, to strengthen a weak stomach, heart or kidneys, if one goes at it correctly. Each inside organ has its controlling nerve. When these nerves fail then those organs must surely falter. These vital truths are leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Test it a few days and see! Improvement will promptly and surely follow. Sold by all dealers.

Home Talent Play Next Week—More Fun Than Anything

The three act comedy drama, "A Country Kid," rehearsals for which have been held for several weeks, will be presented by local talant, under the auspices of the Red Lake Falls Concert Band, at the Metropolitan opera house next Thursday evening, April 15. Those who have seen the play say that it is sure to be lot of fun and if you miss it you surely will—miss it.

The prices are only 35 cents for reserved seats and 25 cents for general admission, but if everybody goes who shoud go, the band boys will realize a a nice profit. The profit is needed to help pay the expenses of maintaining the band. Let everybody in Red Lake Falls who is proud of the band attend the play. That includes about everybody, but why shouldn't everybody go? It would be an appropriate testimonial, one that the band boys deserve and will appreciate.

A matinee for chidren, and for which a charge of only ten cents will be made, will be given Thursday afternoon.

WANTS WEATHER BUREAU

Asks for Stations at Baudette, Warroad and Fosston.

Representative Steenerson has asked Secretary Wilson, of the department of agriculture, to establish weather bureau stations at Baudette, Warroad and Fosston. The purpose of establishing these stations is to ascertain the rainfall in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods for the benefit of the state drainage bureau, when the time comes to construct drainage works in that section of the state.

Hearing Postponed.

Owing to error in description hearing on the petition of A. C. Mayfield and others for the establishment of county ditch No. 82 will not be held April 9. A new day of hearing—Friday, April 23—has been set. There is considerable opposition to the establishment of the ditch and the meeting will no doubt be an interesting one.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

REVIEW OF THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE STATE LEGISLATORS FOR THE WEEK.

St. Paul, March 26.—Members of the Ramsey delegation in the house yesterday, by moving for the indefinite postponement of the Rowe bill prohibiting the location of the Armour packing plant on a site near the university, paved the way for a bill which will prevent the location of any packing plant where it will become a nuisance to the state institutions. When the Rowe bill came up yesterday afternoon as a special order Representative Stone of St. Paul moved that it be indefinitely postponed. The house agreed to the motion unanimously. The new measure has not been agreed upon in all its details, but it will be along milder lines, probably allowing the location of packing plants wherever the state board of health considers their location will not be detrimental to public health. A minimum distance of two and a half miles from any state institution will probably be provided for in the bill.

The house yesterday passed the bill providing a stamp tax of 1 cent on each $100 of sales or agreements to sell on boards of trade and chambers of commerce. The vote was 72 to 43.

The senate bill proposing a constitutional amendment to promote the reforestation of land of private owners was passed by the house.

The bill to reduce the mortgage registry tax to 10 cents on $100 also was passed.

A step towards the consolidation of St. Paul and Minneapolis into one city was taken yesterday when the house passed under suspension of the rules a bill for the appointment by the governor of a commission of five citizens from each city to draw up a bill which would make such consolidation possible, and report the bill to the next legislature. The bill was introduced jointly by J. F. Selb of St. Paul and Thomas Kneeland of Minneapolis.

The house had another tussle with the Cass Lake normal school bill yesterday, spent an hour in talking and roll calls and then left the bill just where it was before. Incidentally the Hinds bill giving the state normal school board the right to locate the school was killed.

In the Senate.

The senate yesterday killed the Cashman distance tariff bill. The vote was 23 to 28. Some of the most eminent attorneys of the senate voted for the bill. Former Attorney General Young, who has charge of the present rate cases for the state, was quoted in debate as strongly opposed to further legislative action until the present cases are disposed of.

Senator Noonan lead an attack on the Wright bill pensioning citizen soldiers of the Indian outbreak of 1862. His fight was unavailing, however, and the bill was recommended to pass.

Senator Swanson renewed his fight against the tuberculin test in the senate yesterday. He made an effort to get an amendment to his bill, making the application of the test optional with local health authorities. No action was taken by the senate.

The establishment of public tuberculosis sanatoria in the counties of the state is authorized in a bill by Senator Pugh.

St. Paul, March 27.—Two railroad measures, the Johnson bill for the regulation of stock and bond issues by railroads and the redrafted commodity rate bill, were passed by the house yesterday. The Johnson bill provides that stocks and bonds must be sold at or above par, for stated purposes only, after the permission of the railroad commission has been secured. It is planned to protect people against fictitious stock issues. The commodity rate bill is the same as that passed at the last session, except that the penalty clause is omitted.

The 6 per cent gross earnings bill was recommended for indefinite postponement yesterday by the committee, and the report was adopted.

The county assessor bill, which was voted down in the house last Wednesday, was resurrected yesterday. Immediately following the bill exempting $200 of the personal property of each family was reconsidered and the bill was placed on the calendar for today.

The abolition of passes to the grand stand at the state fair is recommended in the report of the committee which has been investigating the state fair board's doings. The board is upheld in its decision on a disputed contract to supply fireworks. Some fault is found with the method of bookkeeping, and the report recommends a better system; otherwise the board is given a clean bill of health, and there is not the slightest hint at any question of the integrity of the board.

The employers' liability bill drawn by the special committee appointed for that purpose was a special order in the house yesterday, but was continued until next Tuesday.

The house adopted a resolution protesting against the reduction of the tariff on barley from 30 to 15 cents, as proposed in the Payne bill.

The existence of a mineral spring with wonderful curative properties at Finlayson, Pine county, was called to the attention of the house yesterday when Representative Webb introduced a bill to have the state purchase eighty acres around the spring for a public park.

In the Senate.

There will be no change in the present system of handling public lands. This was decided yesterday when the senate killed three different proposals to make more extended provision for the lands, forests and minerals of the state. The bills were killed after full debate. One of the bills was designed to enlarge the state auditor's department without creating a separate department. The two other bills were modeled after the ideas of the state auditor and the governor respectively. Each contemplated a new department.

Only seventeen state senators yesterday voted in favor of a reapportionment of the senatorial and legislative districts of the state when the matter came up for consideration in the senate on the majority and minority reports from the reapportionment committee. This probably means that there will be no reapportionment for another four years, as at the next session all of the senators will have just entered upon a four-year term, and probably will not vote themselves out of office at that time.

A bill was introduced by the reapportionment committee providing for a constitutional amendment permitting changes of legislative districts at any session.

St. Paul, March 29.—The new packing house bill was introduced Saturday in both the house and the senate. Senator Hanson was sponsor for it in the senate, and in the house it was presented by Representatives Holmberg, Saugstad, Ware, Dorsey, White, Fitzpatrick, Pfaender and Noble. The bill prohibits the location of any packing plant within two and one-half miles of any state educational institution. If it is proposed to locate such a plant between two and one-half and five miles of any such institution the permission of the state board of health must be secured. The board of health is given power to regulate these plants after they start operations to stop the work of any part or the whole plant if it should become a nuisance.

The house suspended the rules and passed a bill providing life imprisonment for kidnapping. The penalty in the 1905 code is twenty years.

Other bills passed in the house were: Authorizing villages to own telephone lines; authorizing railroad commission to select a sealing device and require all scales to be equipped therewith; amending reciprocal demurrage law.

In the Senate.

The senate, after spending several hours debating the anti-tuberculin measure, finally killed it.

Bills introduced were: Relating to the locating of packing plants; prescribing rights of villages which tried to include other lands; requiring railroads to move stock at an average rate of fifteen miles an hour; relating to salary of state highway engineer; to prevent fraud by means of financial statements; relating to protection from fire in halls seating a hundred; limiting powers of county commissioners in spending revenue.

Monday is the last day on which bills can be introduced without the consent of the governor. A deluge is expected.

St. Paul, March 30.—Yesterday was the last day for introducing bills, and the house, besides introducing sixty-seven bills in the afternoon, held a special session in the evening and introduced thirty-four more, making a total of 1,173 for the session. Two years ago the number was 1,174 for the same time.

John McGrath of Barnesville introduced a bill giving wives, children and other dependents the right to sue saloonkeepers and their sureties for any damage they may suffer, either to their person, property or by loss of support caused by their husbands or supporters being drunk.

The midnight lid bill, which was killed, exhumed and buried again by the house some weeks ago, was reintroduced.

A constitutional amendment limiting the session of the legislature to sixty days was introduced by John F. Selb and T. J. Brady of St. Paul.

Robbery in the first degree, which includes holdups, is to be punished by twenty-five to fifty years' imprisonment, under a bill by Frank Nimocks of Minneapolis.

The regulation of salary and chattel mortgage loaning companies is provided in a bill by W. D. Washburn, Jr., of Minneapolis. The maximum interest is 2 per cent per month.

The state auditor is allowed to sell state land to the state board of control for state institutions, under a bill by H. P. Webb of Sandsone. This is intended mostly for the purpose of allowing the proposed state inebriate asylum to be located on state lands.

A reapportionment bill by L. H. Johnson of Minneapolis providing for sixty-five senators and 127 representatives, together with various reapportionment bills pertaining only to small districts, was introduced.

In the Senate.

The senate also had a deluge of bills yesterday, sixty-seven being introduced during the day. Many of them were duplicates of bills introduced in the house.

To take the place of the Cashman distance tariff bill, which the senate killed the other day, a bill was introduced yesterday permitting the railroad commission to issue orders for preferential rates on coal and lumber and other articles which enter the manufacture of products. This will, in a measure, accomplish the same result as was sought in the Cashman bill.

Senator Thorpe introduced a bill cutting the governor's salary from $7,000 to $5,000. The legislature last session raised the governor's salary to $7,000. Senators with gubernatorial ambitions voted for the bill, not knowing that the constitution barred any member of the legislature voting for a salary raise in any state office from holding such office until one year after the expiration of his term as a legislator.

An employers' liability commission, to be appointed by the governor, lieutenant governor and chief justice, to consist of three persons, is provided in a bill by Senator Swanson. This commission is to have the power of a court in determining the amount of damage for accidents to employes.

Correspondence courses for the farmers, with home lecture and farmhouse meetings, won only after a hard fight in committee of the whole in the senate. The bill was recommended for passage after a long and lively debate.

St. Paul, March 31.—The Cass Lake normal school bill passed by the senate recently, was yesterday made a special order in the house for next Friday at 2 p. m. The so-called general bill, which allowed the normal school board to locate the school, was killed some time ago.

By voting down the bills to pay O. Olson of Douglas county and William Foreman of Wabasha county their expenses in the contests they started to get into the legislature, the house yesterday put its disapproval on the long-continued practice of paying the bills of candidates who start contests when they are defeated by a close vote. The bills of the winners in the contests were chopped down considerably.

The bill providing for a seventh judge in Ramsey county was defeated.

The naturopathic examiners' bill was killed by a vote of 83 to 24.

The bill prohibiting the use of slot machines and gambling devices was passed by the house yesterday.

Bills passed: Allowing owners of land held for taxes to redeem same for half of taxes after certain time; fixing term of office of town and village assessors; providing for the licensing of operators of Babcock testers; to regulate the practice of horseshoeing in cities of over 10,000.

In the Senate.

The senate yesterday passed the bill creating a new banking department. The work of examining banks is taken from the public examiner, and the governor is to appoint a new official with a deputy for each congressional district. Examination of banks is to be made twice a year.

The state university will have an experiment forest in Carlton county under the provisions of a bill passed by the senate yesterday. The bill already has passed the house.

The senate yesterday passed the Brady bill giving to the members of the legislature the remaining $500 of their salaries, which, under the present law, would not be forthcoming until next March. With the passage of this bill the house removed the embargo against all senate bills.

The house anti-cigarette bill was recommended for passage in committee of the whole yesterday.

The Mork bill prohibiting young boys in billiard and pool halls was passed by the senate.

The bill prohibiting certain kinds of medical advertising was recommended to pass in committee of the whole.

The bill requiring semi-monthly payment of salaries was killed.

WOMAN PREVENTS LYNCHING.

Pleads With Mob to Let the Law Take Its Course.

Chillicothe, Mo., April 1. — The intervention of Mrs. James Wood, wife of a farmer living south of Jamesport, prevented the lynching of two men accused of shooting and mortally wounding Marshal Caraway at Jamesport yesterday. The men had been surrounded and wounded by a posse of farmers. A rope had been procured and the posse was about to hang up the prisoners when Mrs. Wood interfered.

She pleaded with the leader of the posse to permit the law to take its course. Her plea averted the lynching. The men were taken to the jail at Gallatin, Mo.

SLOW-DRAWING FUNDS.

No Immediate Need Apparent for $300,000 Road and Bridge Fund.

Almost all the counties in the state have some cash in the state treasury under the heading of road and bridge fund, although a bill was passed a couple of days ago providing for an appropriation of $300,000 for the same purpose. The state auditor's books show that some counties have as high as $6,000 in their pork barrel.

Blue Earth county received $3,000 in 1908 and $3,000 in 1909. It has not been touched. To this $6,000 will be added $4,500 this year. Senator S. D. Works of Mankato says they can use that and more when the time comes.

Mille Lacs county has $4,200 untouched, Hubbard $3,800, Beltrami $3,225, Faribault $3,050, Brown $2,500, Lac qui Parle $2,500, Cottonwood $2,360, Big Stone $2,000.

In 1872 he came to Faribault county and opened a farm at Keister, removing to Wells the following year. Mr. Eaton was married to Miss Sarah Wood in 1850, at Stockbridge, N. Y., and five children of the six born to them are still living. Mr Eaton was postmaster at Wells about eight years. He still owned his farm at Keister and frequently walked out there, nineteen miles, although eighty-five years of age.

SUES FOR QUARTER MILLION.

Great Northern Opposes 4 Per Cent Gross Earnings Tax.

The State of Minnesota has filed in the district court at St. Paul two suits against the Great Northern railway for sums aggregating a quarter of a million dollars, alleged to be due on gross earnings taxes for 1906 and 1907.

The tax is alleged to be due on the lines leased by the Great Northern from the Manitoba company. The 1906 tax, said to be in arrears amounts to $133,115.14; that for 1907 amounts to $139,254.04. This amount is 1 per cent of the gross earnings on the leased lines.

In answer the railroad contends that the Minnesota law of 1903 imposing a 4 per cent gross earnings tax on the lines leased from the Manitoba company is unconstitutional. The 3 per cent tax has been paid by the Great Northern.

CHANCE FOR GOOD JOB.

Minnesota to Get Fair Share of Civil Service Appointments.

Lucrative jobs in the census department, which range from $900 to $2,000 in salary, are to be given out this year by the civil service commission. There are about 3,400 places as clerks and overseers and heads of departments that are to be filled. The length of service is to be three years and there is a good possibility of clerks in the census department being transferred to other departments of the government when the time in the census bureau expires.

Minnesota is due to receive eighty five of these appointments, and the local civil service board is expecting reports from Washington shortly with application blanks and papers for applicants. The examinations will be held some time in July in St. Paul. These are not difficult, covering mostly the common branches.

IN SNOWDRIFT FIFTY-ONE DAYS

Domestic Duck Lost in a Blizzard Survives Long Fast.

After the blizzard of Jan. 28 John Harding, a farmer near Comfrey missed two ducks from his barnyard. Presuming they had perished in the storm, the matter was forgotten. Recently, as a team and carriage were leaving the yard, one wheel broke through a snowdrift, dropping into a hole. The rig went on, but a member of the family investigated and found a live duck, one of the two that disappeared on the night of Jan. 28. It had been entombed fifty-one days. The duck immediately commenced to satisfy its sharpened appetite, and with the exception of being weak, is apparently none the worse for its long fast.

NO-LICENSE MEN CONFIDENT.

Hutchinson Pleased With Year's Record Without Saloons.

Hutchinson is warming up for a contest over the license question at the annual city election April 6. The town has made a conspicuous success of no license. There has been only one arrest for law violation—that of a brewery man. There has been no blind pig business and no drunkenness. The merchants have done their usual amount of business.

The no-license people are confident that they will win again, but to help make sure will bring in some speakers. Peter M. Youngdahl will deliver an address there. Frank M. Eddy will speak on April 1 and M. T. Moen on April 5. It is generally conceded that Mayor J. F. Beytien, who has been active in enforcing the liquor laws, will be re-elected.

The young woman wrote a letter to the tiller of the soil and received an answer in which the farmer declared himself pleased at having heard from her, etc. [illegible]

What Government Experts and Other Prominent Writers Say on Agriculture and Allied Topics.

STARTING AN ORCHARD IN THE RIGHT WAY

Pruning and Cultivating Are Necessary to Secure the Best Results—By Prof. V. H. Davis, Ohio Agricultural College.

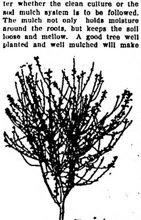
The first few years of the life of an orchard is the most critical period of its existence, because neglect is more likely to occur and the injuries done at this time can, in many cases, never be overcome by subsequent good care. In my orchard of some 8,000 apple trees are a few hundred each of pear, plum, cherry and peach, a plan somewhat as follows was pursued in selecting apple, pear, cherry and plum stock:

I took trees not more than two years old from bud or graft. In my judgment, trees of this age will stand transplanting better than older ones, and in the end will make better trees. Peach trees are large enough at one year and should never be older. Trees were ordered in the fall for spring shipment, at which season, in my case, they were set out. I bought from the large nurseries that grow their own stock and deliver direct from their own grounds. The small nursery in the locality of the orchard is usually preferable for small quantities of plants, but is not available for large orders. I never buy from agents, because I object to paying their commission. The nurseryman who is largely a dealer is also avoided, for every time trees are handled the chance of mixing varieties increases and it becomes more difficult to fix responsibility in case of misrepresentation.

Nurserymen are responding to the popular demand for low-headed trees, but they are not low enough yet. The first branches should be not more than 30 inches from the ground and less would usually be preferable. Shipments should be made as early in the spring as weather conditions will permit and upon arrival the trees should be unpacked and "heeled in" at once. Transplanting should be done just as early as the soil will work readily.

The roots should never be exposed for any length of time to the sun and wind, and should always go into the soil wet. In the morning we take up about the number of trees that can be planted before noon and prune the roots. These are placed on a sled or wagon and covered at once with straw, carpet or burlap and water thrown over the entire bundle until thoroughly wet. Immediately after transplanting, the trees should be well mulched with hay, straw, manure or any material not too coarse.

This mulching is essential, no matter whether the clean culture or the sod mulch system is to be followed. The mulch not only holds moisture around the roots, but keeps the soil loose and mellow. A good tree well planted and well mulched will make a surprising growth the first year. I have measured as much as five feet in our own orchard in soil considered poor.

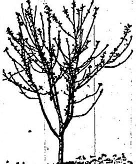


Four-Year-Old Tree Before Pruning.

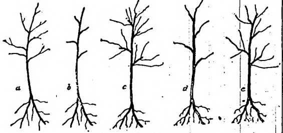
Pruning is the one operation of the orchard most neglected or improperly done. As to the roots, they require little pruning, because 50 per cent. or more of the root system is left in the soil, even with the most careful digging. All broken or mangled roots should be cut off smoothly back to solid wood, in order to give the wounds a chance to heal readily. A root much longer than the others may be cut back for the sake of symmetry and ease of transplanting.

After transplanting, the top is cut back to correspond to the loss of roots. Otherwise the evaporation of moisture from the top may be more rapid than the broken roots' can absorb it, and the trees suffer, if not die outright. With apple, pear, plum and cherry from three to five branches should be selected from those on the tree as it comes from the nursery, to form the scaffold branches of the future top. These should be situated alternately along the trunk, but never opposite each other, and should be cut back to spurs five to ten inches in length. The others are removed entirely. Each of these spurs will throw out several branches the first season, but the ends of the spurs will usually dry out and begin to decay.

The second pruning is confined almost wholly to the removal of the dead tips of these branches or spurs. These are cut back to the base of the first new branches, and if the wood shows no decay the wound is left to heal. If, however, there are signs of decaying wood, the cut is made at the base of the next branch and so on until solid wood is found. Otherwise the decay will run back into the main branches, or even to the trunk of the tree, and eventually cause its death. Every branch that does not mar the general form of the top is left on the little tree during the second season to bear leaves and manufacture plant food. Root growth depends upon the leaves just as much as branch and leaf growth depends upon the roots, and the root system, weakened by transplanting, needs the stimulus of all the plant food possible in order to renew the parts destroyed. This renewed vigor immediately manifests itself in growth of top, and the less the equilibrium between root and top is disturbed the greater will be the tendency to bear fruit so far as the pruning factor alone is concerned. Subsequent pruning should consist largely in thinning out the superfluous branches and wayward growths sufficient to admit proper amounts of air and sunshine. Many branches marked for removal the second or third season may very profitably be left until they have borne fruit for several years.



Four-Year-Old Tree After Pruning.



THE PROPER WAY OF PRUNING.

(a) Tree as received from nursery. (b) Same pruned after transplanting. (c) Same at end of first season. (d) Same as usually pruned the second spring. (e) Same properly pruned the second season.

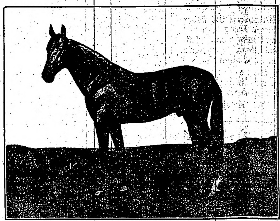
Mice injuries are prevented by cleaning up all rubbish in which they might breed and congregate, keeping the soil around the tree for two or three feet perfectly bare. Frequently a little mound of earth six or eight inches high is piled and tramped solidly around the base of the tree. So far as rabbit injuries are concerned, the removal of all brush, briars, weeds, etc., in which they are most likely to congregate, together with a liberal use of the gun and ferret, have prevented any serious trouble with me so far.

Pasteurizing Milk.—It is generally conceded that pasteurizing milk adds nothing to its wholesomeness. In fact, it is generally believed that pure milk is injured more or less by pasteurization. Milk that has not been produced under sanitary conditions and which may contain disease producing germs, is far more beneficial and wholesome if pasteurized than if used in the raw state. In other words, pasteurization will improve faulty products but will not improve pure products. The best authorities agree that it is better to feed pasteurized milk to children than to feed them the average milk as it is delivered in the cities. We think that all will agree that if they can get pure and wholesome milk pasteurization will not improve it for infant feeding.

Practice of Dehorning.—Dehorning affects the cows but little in the milk flow and fat production and not at all if done three or four weeks before calving. We have seen a great many cows dehorned and as a whole no ill results whatever come from this practice. It is a rather cruel operation when the horn is being removed but after the operation is over the cow suffers but little, if any.

THE MOVE FOR A BETTER BREED OF HORSES

States Which Have Laws Regulating the Registration of Stallions.



Belmont 64.

Son of Alexander's Abdallah, and a horse often found in the pedigrees of American carriage horses. Belmont was the sire of Egmont, who sired Johnnie Mack, the sire of Lord Brilliant.

Owners of pure-bred stallions have been pleased to comply with the Wisconsin law as regards posters, having nothing to hide and everything to gain by publicity; others have been lax in this respect or have pleaded ignorance as an excuse, when taken to task for their negligence. This condition of affairs will be apt to continue to a greater or less degree if, as is now the case in many districts, owners of mares aid and abet the owners of stallions in their evasion of the law and also are indifferent as to the breeding of the stallions they patronize, provided the service fee is kept sufficiently low. A cheap service fee is the least consideration in breeding horses. The cheap fee means a cheap selling offspring. It is the proverbial "penny wise, pound foolish" policy and it is high time that our farmers learn that it is to their best interest to make sure that the stallion they patronize is pure-bred, sound, a fine individual and properly prepotent and in that case the service fee will be of little moment and will be more than paid back when the time comes to sell the colt.

If a groceryman must sell oleomargarine he should at least ticket it as such and not advertise it as pure, creamery butter. In exactly the same way it is but right that the man who offers a counterfeit, grade, or scrub stallion for public service should advertise its true breeding and this is done when, according to law, the license certificate is printed and posted up in conspicuous places wherever the horse is used.

Relative to the stallion situation the following facts will be of interest to horse breeders:

The secretary of the stallion registration board of Minnesota, Prof. Andrew Boss, says: "The law requiring the enrollment and licensing of stallions was passed on April 25, 1907. The board was organized in May, and during the first year of its existence has licensed 2,959 horses. Of these 1,110, or 37.5 per cent., are pure-bred; 1,849, or 62.5 per cent., are grades; 96 have been refused license on account of unsoundnesses which are recorded as transmissible and would be likely to affect the get of these stallions. It is estimated that 25 to 30 stallion owners have been advised by local veterinarians that their horses could not pass examination and application has not been sent in for them. In all probability 125 unsound horses have been kept from service in the state this year. The Percheron breed of horses leads all others both in grades and pure-breds, with standard-bred trotters second and Belgians third in the list.

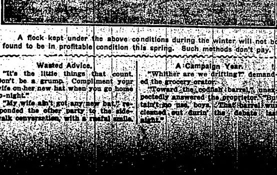
"In some sections of the state there is slight opposition to the law, due largely to local prejudice, or misrepresentation on the part of some prejudiced stallion owner, or other interested party. As a whole, the law is meeting with the approval of the horse breeders of the state. This is evidenced both by the large number of horses registered, and by the correspondence necessary in securing licenses. With only a few exceptions, the law is being obeyed strictly, some counties reporting only one or two horses still unlicensed. Some misunderstanding still exists regarding Sections 5 and 7 of the law relative to posters. The law requires a poster containing copy of the license certificate on the door of every stable at which the horse is stood for public service. In many places these particular sections of the law are not being observed simply because the owners of stallions do not know that it is necessary. Where informed that this is required, there is little difficulty in securing the posting of the license."

In Pennsylvania, where the stallion law has been in effect for one season, 1,820 stallions have been licensed, of which 604, or 33.2 per cent., are pure-bred and 1,216, or 66.8 per cent., are grades and mongrels.

In New Jersey the legislature last winter (1907-08) passed a stallion law based upon that of Wisconsin, but having the following important differences: The work of stallion enrollment is to be done by a stallion registration board, consisting of the animal husbandman of the State Experiment station, who shall be secretary and executive officer; a graduate veterinarian and a prominent breeder of live stock. "It shall be the duty of the board to examine personally each stallion or jack and determine to the best of their knowledge and belief whether said stallion or jack is free from infectious, contagious or transmissable diseases or unsoundness and their findings shall be final." The board is authorized in case of emergency to name a committee in each county, consisting of a graduate veterinarian and a practical horseman who shall examine the various stallions or jacks in the said county as to soundness. The fee for enrollment is $5 and $2 shall be paid annually for the renewal of pedigree certificate and service license. Stallions shall be examined every year until ten years of age, and after the first examination shall be exempt, if ten years of age or over. The act went into effect September 1, 1908.

The legislature of New Jersey also enacted a unique and important bill which now is in force and provides for the appointment of a live stock commission by the governor, consisting of the director of the state experiment station and the master of the state grange, ex-officio; the animal husbandman of the state experiment station, who shall be secretary and executive officer of the commission; a graduate veterinarian and a prominent breeder of live stock. "It shall be the duty of this commission: First, to purchase and maintain stallions of draft and coach type for distribution and use in the several counties of the state, wherever breeders' associations have been duly organized and which provide dams for breeding, which shall conform to the standards and rules established by the commission; second, to aid in the selection and distribution of breeding sires and dams of other classes of live stock; and third, to constitute a stallion examining board." The sum of $20,000 is appropriated to the commission for the current year, and thereafter $5,000 annually for the purpose of carrying out the provision of the act.

A Cold Meal and No Profit to Owner



A flock kept under the above conditions during the winter will not be found to be in profitable condition this spring. Such methods don't pay.

Wasted Advice.

"It's the little things that count. Don't be a grump. Compliment your wife on her new hat when you go home to-night."

"My wife ain't got any new hat," responded the other party to the sidewalk conversation, with a rueful smile.

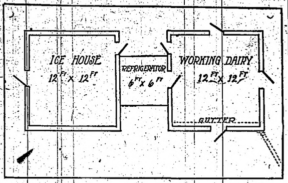
A Campaign Year.

"Whither are we drifting?" demanded the grocery orator.

"Toward the codfish barrel," unexpectedly answered the proprietor. "But tain't no use, boys. That barrel was cleaned out durin' the debate last night."

IDEAL ARRANGEMENT FOR FARM CREAMERY

Plans for Buildings Which Would Cost About Six Hundred Dollars—By Prof. H. H. Dean, Ontario Agricultural College.



The working dairy has a ten-foot ceiling and the concrete flood slopes two inches to the gutter. Cold air circulates from the ice-house through the refrigerator. Openings being provided between the two parts. There should also be suitable flues for the warm air to pass from the refrigerator to the ice. Perfect circulation of air is essential to a dry refrigerator.

A building 12 by 12 feet will not be too large for a small creamery, especially if room for a refrigerator is taken out. If a balloon frame of two by four-inch scantlings is made, there ought to be a boarding of inch lumber, then one or two ply of building paper, then matched lumber inside and planed boards with battens on the outside, and the air space at the top and bottom between the studs should be made as tight as possible in order to make a "dead" or "still" air space in the wall which is the best non-conductor of heat and cold. It is better still to fill this space with planer shavings or asbestos, though this will add to the cost. The ceiling should be finished with two ply of lumber, and one or two ply of paper between.

If the farmer can afford to do so, we should advise having the air circulate from the ice to the refrigerator, which is most conveniently placed between the ice house and the creamery or working room. By this plan the ice does not need to be moved for cooling the refrigerator, thus saving labor. The walls of both ice-house and refrigerator need to be well insulated for good results on this plan.

Where a small refrigerator only is required and where the supply of ice is kept in a house and covered with sawdust, as is the custom on most farms, we believe it would be most satisfactory to purchase an ordinary house refrigerator of the desired size and keep this in one corner of the small creamery. This refrigerator can be filled from the ice-house as may be required, and for such a dairy as seems to be needed by subscriber, it will probably be the most satisfactory form of refrigerator. An ice box might be made in one corner of the work room, or be built under the ice, where the ice-house adjoins the creamery, but such an arrangement is likely to produce dampness in the cool chamber, which means moldy butter.

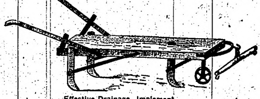
The plan shown herewith for a combined dairy, refrigerator and ice-house, would probably cost $500 to $600. If this is too expensive, then we should favor a well-built balloon frame with four-inch air space, and the use of an ordinary house refrigerator for cooling, and holding the butter until it is ready for market.

MAKE YOUR OWN DRAINAGE IMPLEMENT

By H. E. Cook.

Many a farmer is delayed in his work by so-called spring holes, or spots where water comes to the surface, and having no chance to get away, soaks into the soil until an acre, perhaps more, is influenced. We all understand that the water should be taken out, but have been educated to believe that drainage is to be advised only when we can systematically lay out a field four to six rods apart and put the tile down four feet deep.

Our subsoils in the east are generally hard, and must be picked up before they can be handed with a shovel. It is not very encouraging to ask a man upon soils worth $30 an acre to spend $25 or, perhaps, $40 an acre in tile and labor, and this is particularly true when we ask him to dig four feet deep into this hard soil. But here is a cheap way out of this trouble. It will help the back and the conscience, as well as the pocketbook. Let me suggest the use of a soil loosener or digger, which can be made at any country blacksmith repair shop at a small expense, I should say not to exceed $15.



Effective Drainage Implement.

There may be such a tool manufactured, but I do not know where. If there is, perhaps this article will bring it out. Let us take a plow, first throwing out a furrow, then go in with the digger and continue until we are down two feet leading from the center of this spring hole to some favorable outlet. It is never difficult to find an outlet, because these conditions are nearly always found upon hilly or rolling land where grades are easy. After we have found the advantage of these special leaders, if we have put in a good-sized tile three or four inches, we can afterward put in laterals connecting this main with the surrounding land.

The frame for this machine should be a three-inch hard wood plank five feet long and ten inches wide. Have three coulter-shaped irons turned up and pointed so they will dig 18 inches long, three inches wide and five-eighths inch thick. Put an old plow wheel under the front end to balance the machine, arrange a draw iron in front and handles which can be raised and lowered to accommodate the holder as he walks behind astride the ditch. The horses are hitched to an evener six feet long, one each side of the ditch. The driver sits upon the machine, which will usually be all the extra weight needed. The number of times necessary to open up the soil will depend upon the subsoil. Go through until the soil has loosened to give a shovelful in a place. The shoveler will not then have to push his shovel beyond its own length.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Skimmed Milk Good Calf Feed.—The value of sterilized skimmed milk as calf feed has been investigated by Prof. D. H. Otis of the University of Wisconsin college of agriculture. He finds that it is better than the unsterilized skimmed milk, as calves fed upon it are less subject to scours, and consequently "off feed" less than others. It has sometimes been said that the feeding value of milk was seriously affected when it is sterilized to prevent the possibility of its being a medium for the spread of tuberculosis or other diseases. The necessary heating, frequently accomplished by injecting live or exhaust steam into the milk, adds from eight to fifteen per cent. of water, which it has been thought lowers its value as a calf feed. Experiments on six calves, which were fed sterilized milk, and seven that were fed unheated skimmed milk fresh from the hand separator for 142 days, show that both made practically the same daily gain per head, 1.75 pounds.

Cows That Make Profit.—Prof. C. H. Eckles of the Missouri college of agriculture, says the milk produced by the average Missouri cow will sell for about $30 at the creamery, or when made into first-class butter. A good cow of the dairy breeds will make at least $50 cash income every year. I have a list of about fifty Missouri farmers who report a cash income of from $50 to $100 per cow every year, and these figures do not include the income from the calves and pigs fed on the skim-milk. But, says one, milking is a tremendous task. As a matter of fact, it takes only 60 hours' time, worth about six dollars, to milk a cow six months.

Overtaken.

A wizened little man charged his wife with cruel and abusive treatment. His better half, or in this case better two-thirds, was a big, square-jawed woman with a determined eye.

The judge listened to the plaintiff's recital of wrongs with interest.

"Where did you meet this woman who, according to your story, has treated you so dreadfully?" his honor asked.

"Well, judge," replied the little man, making a brave attempt to glare defiantly at his wife, "I never did meet her. She just kind of overtook me."

Fruit and Temperance.

In America a distinctly increased demand for fruit has been noticed within the last year or two, and is ascribed in the first instance to the growth of the temperance movement. As a man loses the taste for alcohol so he encourages the more natural and primitive appetite for fresh fruit.

JUST A MATTER OF NERVE.

How Lovesick Washington Youth Got Introduction to Charmer.

Not so very long ago when a certain musical comedy company was in town a well known youth of the city was in a very hard way. No one exactly knew the cause of the soulful looks that he emitted on occasion, but he kept it no secret that he went to the theater as much as every night in the week to see the same show.

Of course no one on earth could keep a secret forever, especially a lovelorn youth. And accordingly, with great air of mystery, he took somebody into his confidence. But all the same he told it as though he were proud of it. Yes, the great secret was out. He was desperately infatuated with one of the leading sopranos of the musical comedy company.

So far so well. But the worst was yet to come. He hadn't met the object of his adoration yet. No. To be sure, he couldn't think of waiting at the stage door with the rest of the Johnnies and ask her to take supper with him. No, indeed. That couldn't be thought of. But he had been so bold as to send her several bunches of American Beauties at ten bucks a throw with little notes inclosed. But, worse luck, she hadn't seen fit to answer the notes. So, coming to the point of his long preamble, could his friend do anything for him?

Why certainly, that was what friends were for. He would introduce him to her that very night.

Lifted on the wave of ecstasy, the lovesick swain took his friend to dinner and afterward to the theater. Then after the show they waited in front of the stage entrance until the divinity should appear. It seemed hours, but at last they saw her coming down the alleyway.

The lovesick one's heart nearly stopped beating and then he saw his friend step up to the fair one.

"Miss X——," he heard him say. "I would like to have you meet my friend Mr. A——"

"I am very glad to meet you, Mr. A——," she said, giving him her hand.

It was done now and still he wasn't too paralyzed to murmur some appropriate greeting, when—what was that she was saying as his friend had started away?

"But who is going to introduce you?"

"Oh," said the accommodating friend, "Bobby is the one who wanted to meet you; I don't."—Washington Star.

HISTORIC NAMES AT CAPITAL.

Washington Contains Many Descendants of Famous Men.

Washington fairly buzzes with great historic names, and one might think that time had turned backward to hear the solemn announcements at the official levees. There is one bearer of a great name in Washington who has been so modest that only latterly have people begun to realize exactly who he is. This is Baron Germain de Stael-Holstein, great-grandson of the famous Mme. Anna Louise Necker de Stael, author, patriot and philosopher. The baron is second secretary of the Russian embassy, and lives the quiet life of a student. He is almost middle aged, but it still a bachelor. Though he has inherited all the mental brilliancy which distinguished his great ancestress he has none of her social talents. Baron de Stael-Holstein mingles in the gay throng just enough to fulfill his obligations, and the remainder of his days is passed in reading and enjoying music. He is fair and of medium height and not unlike the most famous woman of modern times in appearance. The children of Mme. de Stael by her first unhappy marriage were early separated from her, and the father of the present Russian diplomat left Sweden and joined his fate and fortune with the Muscovite empire. He became high in councils of state, as no doubt will his son. For Russian diplomacy moves in grades, like the military life of this country.

White House Renovated.

When William Howard Taft steps into the White House at noon on the 4th of March as the new president of the United States of America, he will find a model home equipped with every modern convenience; that is what other presidents have never enjoyed. Before the election of President Roosevelt few changes had been made in the White House since the days of John Quincy Adams, when it was rebuilt after being fired by the marauding British troops, only the walls being left standing.

The executive mansion, as it was called before the advent of Mr. Roosevelt—he dubbed it officially "The White House"—was the first public building erected at the seat of government. The architect was James Hoban, who drew his plans closely after those of the seat of the duke of Leinster, near Dublin, Ireland. George Washington, himself, selected the site, laid the corner stone on October 13, 1792, and lived to see the building completed. John Adams, however, was the first president to occupy it, which he did in 1800.—From "New Home of Mr. Taft," in Technical World Magazine.

Judge Harlan His Son's Twin.

The most remarkable likeness between any two men in America, not barring twins, exists between Justice Harlan of the United States supreme court and his son, John Maynard Harlan, a Chicago lawyer and politician. Except for the disparity of their ages, the two men are the exact counterpart of each other—same height, weight and contour of face, even to the mustaches, when both wear this masculine adornment. And the resemblance does not end here, for both father and son have high foreheads with the same thinning of the hair on the temples.

No License Gaining in Ohio.

Of the 62 Ohio counties which have so far voted on the liquor license question, 55 have gone "dry." These 55 counties cover about two-thirds of the state's area, and include nearly one-half of the population, but few of them have any large cities. Twenty-six counties are yet to vote under the new county option law.

According to the weather bureau spring is due to arrive officially April [illegible] But somehow nature never cared much for official bookkeeping.

James J. Hill has told the Minnesota congressmen that we must have free lumber or get seven populist congressmen next year. The prospective loss of his job is often a strong incentive of a statesman to do right.

In Oklahoma fifty-one national banks have surrendered their charters and organized under the state law in order to take advantage of the deposit guaranty law. Kansas and Nebraska have passed the same law, and if the plan continues to work successfully many more of the western states will come in line when the 1910 legislatures meet.

"If you have typhoid fever in your neighborhood you deserve it. If you have scarlet fever, you deserve it." This was the assertion of Dr. W. A. Evans, heatlh commissioner of Chicago, in an address recently. "I mean," he added, "that where typhoid and scarlet fever epidemics occur they are always deserved. They never enter in unless the door is left open. And the careless ones are those who permit the doors to remain ajar."

The legislature is not getting many compliments, and even the staid old Pioneer Press, generally satisfied with existing conditions, lets out a roar:

> "The question will soon pass from mouth to mouth among voters, 'What has the republican majorty done for the state—what that a democratic majority could not have done in the same perfunctory way' Democrats can pass appropriation bills, and log-rolling normal school bills, and salary-raising bills, and pork-barrel road laws, just as well as republicans."

Knute Aker, who owns a farm near Climax in southwestern Polk county expressed himself as follows, after a recent visit to Iowa: "I would not trade my Polk county farm, acre for acre, for any farm in Iowa. Iowa land never had the staying qualities of Red River Valley land. I would not trade even, and in fact would not trade at all. We have the best farming country in the world and this fact is becoming known every year. The time is not far distant when the price of land here will show what the real value of valley land is.

The bonanza farm of the Red River Valley is fast becoming a thing of the past, says the Ada Herald. Recently the Stanford farm, near Hillsboro, on the Dakota side, was divided into small farms and sold to settlers from the eastern states; last week the Pembina farm, one of the largest farms in Marshall county, was sold to Illinois parties who will sub-divide it into small farms. It is not so many years ago since the Lockhart farm in this county was cut up into small farms.

The Sauk Centre Herald truthfully remarks: "While searching for causes of the deficit in the national treasury, congress should not overlook the government printing office. Millions of dollars are squandered there yearly on stuff that rarely fails to find a resting place in the waste basket. If the government should attempt to manufacture and sell clothing, groceries, or other commodities as it attempts to deprive the printer of his living by printing envelopes and other things below cost, wouldn't there be a howl?"

The entries for the republican gubernatorial handicap next year are Bob Dunn, A. O. Eberhart and Ripley Brower. This list may be extended when Julius Schmahl, Clearence Dinehart and Sam Iverson get busy. Bob Dunn has already amalgamated the Dunn and Jacobson forces, and the game is to nominate Bob for governor and Jake for auditor. Since the ticket is to be made up of consolation prizes why not put on William Henry Eustis for secretary of state? And if A. L. Cole were alive, here would be the opportunity to reward him for his sacrifice of 1906.

STUDENTS SHOULD THINK.

The follwing address of President Cyrus Northrup, of the state university, delivered last week before the St. Paul high school teachers' club is well worth reading:

"Girls who expect to be wives and mothers ought to be thoughtful and not frivolous, intelligent and not empty-minded, public spirited and not entirely devoted to bridge whist—and it all comes to this that the girls as well as the boys ought to be taught to think and be able to form a just conclusion from adequate facts clearly stated.

'Now the first thing which appears to me to be true and undesirable is that our students do not work hard enough—they do not spend enough time upon the preparation of their lessons, and they do not apply their minds closely enough to their work when they do study. They do not seem to have the proper ideals of scholarship before them. To get through without condition or failures seems to be the highest ideal of the better class of students; and to get through somehow seems to be the highest ideal of the rest. It seems to me that our scholars do not do as much thinking as they ought to. We are professedly preparing them for life. Many of them will not get beyond the high school. But whether they do or not it seems to me there is the same trouble—they do not think—especially they do not do any independent thinking. They take what they are told.

"There has come a popualr contention that much time is foolishly spent in examinations and therefore examinations should be abandoned. But I am certain that a rigid examination of a class at the end of its work in any study, by the teacher who has taught them and therefore by examination a class can find out whether they know what, as a result of the work done, they ought to know, I repeat that such an examination is most valuable, and by not giving such examinations great injury is done to the educational work.

"There is a general feeling in most of our colleges and among our high school teachers that something is wrong with our education. Can we find out what the trouble is? I think the mischief lies in not giving sufficient intellectual training, and that arises from our substituting for the mental drill a great variety of knowledge spread thin."

Moorhead News: It is a noticeable fact that a very large proportion of the purchases made at the auction sales being held in Clay county this spring, are paid for in cash, the proportion taking advantage of deferred payments at so much per cent., being comparatively small. Virginia Virginian: The Creek Indians in Oklahoma are on the warpath again, and Chief Crazy Snake is laboring under the halucination that he is going to overthrow the government. There are a great many chiefs now basking in the sunshine of the happy hunting grounds, who made an attempt to do the same thing. The late old warrior should profit by their failure.

Wabasha Herald: In the state capitol of Minnesota are several niches placed there to hold statues of Minnesota's great men. In the first niche now stands the statue of Col. William Colville, commander of the First Minnesota who stood at the head of that regiment, on the bloody field of Gettysburg. On that day the First Minnesota withstood that awful charge of Pickett's troops in a battle that goes as one of the greatest in history. Then the country paid its tribute to that gallant band and yesterday the people of Minnesota again paid tribute to our first regiment and its gallant leader.

This Simple Home-Made Treatment Will Overcome Rheumatism.

Few people here know that you can cure that dread American disease, rheumatism, with just common every day drugs found in any drug store. The prescription is so simple that anyone can prepare it at home at small cost. It is made up as follows: Get from any good prescription pharmacy Fluid Extract Dandelion, one half ounce; compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. These are all simple ingredients, makng an absolutey harmless home remedy at little cost.

Rheumatism, as everyone knows, is a symptom of deranged kidneys. It is a condition produced by the failure of the kidneys to properly filter or strain from the blood the uric acid and other matter, which, if not eradicated, either in the urine or through the skin pores, remains in the blood, decomposes and forms about the joints and muscles, causing the untold suffering and the deformity of rheumatism.

This prescription is said to be a splendid healing, cleansing and invigorating tonic to the kidneys, and gives almost immediate relief in all forms of bladder and urinary troubles and backache.

SCISSORETTES

Not every man can break a colt, but almost any woman can break a man, and some of them can break him double—financially, and to wear a halter.

"What shall I play?" asked the church organist of the absent-minded clergyman, who had been a sport in his day. "What sort of a hand have you got?" was the unexpected reply.

Undreneath the balcony he played his light guitar. The moon was afloat like a silver boat in the sea-blue depths ajar, but no one from the lattice peeped to answer to his ardent wishes. His love, his adored one, where was she? Why, back there just where she ought to be—in the kitchen, washing dishes!

Last week during a very cold spell there was a wreck on an Iowa railroad, according to Max Katz, and when the shock came he was pitched over a couple of seats, and had the contents of the ice water tank poured down his neck. "I wouldn't have minded it so much," said Max, "but some wise guy pulled me out of the debris and began telling me to keep cool. Think of keeping cool with a few gallons of ice water down your back and the thermometer a million degrees below zero."

A certain reformed bachelor, one of those who succeeded in getting off the lists during leap year, tells of one of the boys, who after attending a farewell bachelor supper meandered home in a muddled state late one Saturday, or rather Sunday morning, and getting as far as the entrance of his rooming house, he sat down on the stone steps, his hat fell off on his knees and with head bowed down he slumbered peacefully. He awoke about nine o'clock and found 34 cents in his hat. Charitably inclined early churchgoers had mistaken him for a beggar and dropped their pennies into his hat.

If there were no women, men would have no object in life; their mutaches would cease to interest them; they would not care a Chinaman whether their collars were ironed or not; they would have nobody to nurse them when they had the toothache, or to keep them from believing they were going to die when an old-fashioned stomach-ache had the grip upon them. There would be nobody to take for ice cream, and no small edition of flesh and blood to hug. There would be nobody to fight against being kissed and then take to it as natural as the cat does to cream. Most important of all, there would be nobody to write against, to complain of and to love with all your heart and soul. Without her, man would never get to heaven, and without them they would never have a taste of the other place on earth. So, if man has any sense whatever he'll put his arm around the woman he is the fondest of, thank the good Lord for her, and wonder, as she does, what in the world he would do without her.—Webber Falls (Okla.) Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good!! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the difference. No poison marks there! You can always be on the safe side by demanding

WORK WEAKENS KIDNEYS.

Doan's Kidney Pills Have Done Great Service for People Who Work in Red Lake Falls.

Most Red Lake Falls people work every day in some strained, unnatural position—bending constatnly over a desk—riding on jolting wagons or cars—doing laborious housework; lifting reaching or pulling, or trying the back in a hundred and one other ways. All the strains tend to wear, weaken and injure the kidneys until they fall behind in their work of filtering the poisons from the blood. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys, put new strength in bad backs.

Noel Herbert of 338 Hunter St., Crookston, Minn., says: "My back pained terribly and totally unfitted me for any exertion. There were times when I had to be helped up and although during the past winter I felt somewhat better, I was still far from being well. I heard about Doan's Pills and finally procured a box. I started using them and it was not long before I noticed that my back was gradually getting better. I am glad to state that the old trouble entirely left me and I have not felt a vestige of it since. I give them the endorsement with the hope that others may be convinced of the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills.

The above statement was made by Mr. Hebert in 1898, nearly six years later he added: "Doan's Kidney Pills so completely relieved me of kidney trouble six years ago that there had been no return of it. It is a pleasure to again endorse this remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.

CONRAD LOHR,
Anderson, Ind. 122 E. 19th St.

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

CURES INDIGESTION.

Take your sour stomach—or maybe you call it indegestion, dyspepsia, gastritis or catarrh of the stomach; it does not matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to the Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your stomach misery.

The correct name for your trouble is food fermentation—food souring; the digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nauseau, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constiptaion, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness and many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself, after your next meal, that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating of what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin. 27-30

THIRTY-THREE YEARS IN SOLITARY

How Jessie Pomeroy, World's Most Famous Boy Murderer, Has Learned Sciences.

In a small stone cell ever since the Centennial exhibition at Philadelphia there has been locked up in the Massachusetts state prison in Charlestown a life prisoner whose name is familiar to all New England, perhaps to a large portion of the reading public. Since he has been there the United States has added 20,000,000 inhabitants to its population.

He is the only prisoner in Masssachusetts undergoing continuous solitary confinement.

The warm and cheering sun never shines upon him. For thirty-three-years his face has never been seen to brighten with a smile.

Regarding this extraordinary character New England knows more false stories than on almost any other subject. Persistent publicity regarding him has contained fewer actual facts than ever before kept life in so prolonged discussion. Against no prisoner—at least in Massachusetts—has public indignation been so continuously bitter.

Here will be presented for the first time many facts hitherto unpublished regarding Jesse Pomeroy.

It is against a fiendish newsboy and his crimes that the public memory still nurtures intense indignation. But in Pomeroy's cell it is neither boy nor fiend. Behind his grated door sits reading hour after hour today a man arrived at his maturity, a penitent, sobered and tempered with the passing of fifty long years of an unusual life.

Surrounding him, almost within a hundred yards of his cell, is the turmoil of a city's busiest industries—factories, warehouses, railroads, shipping of all kinds—that he has not seen for thirty-three years. All about him are wonders of electrical invention—elevated railroads, telephones, arc lights—but he knows of them only through pictures and hearsay, as does a remote barbarian. With the very essence of the twentieth century all about him, this man lives in the solitude of a medieval monk. He is no part of the age in which he lives. Right in the town of his birth he is exiled by society. He has no future to anticipate, and so, with his face turned toward the past, he duplicates the life of an anchorite of the dark ages, with the three vows enforced upon him by the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Strange youth that he was, and peculiar man that the unusual circumstances of his life have developed Pomeroy is a rarity for psychological study. Not alone to psychologists, however, but to penologists and to lawyers interested in the evolution of legal interpretations his case will stand out in histories like a signboard on a devious road. Valuable subject that he is of many fields of intellectual endeavor, however, accurate data regarding him are meager and difficult to obtain.

Much Untruth Told.

Were this a paternal government where a strict censorship could be placed upon publicity or where the topic could be absolutely placed under the ban it is probable that Jesse Pomeray's name would long ago have been eliminated from type. All officialdom would rejoice if the public could forget his name. Curiosity regarding him, nevertheless, continues year after year, and the public hungrily swallows the scanty news of him that is made known in spite of official prohibitions. What has been printed about him since his imprisonment has been one part fact and nine parts imagination. The accumulation in the public mind has created a popular conception of the prisoner which would be difficult to correct. If it is at all possible to get an outraged public consider dispassionately the subject of its prejudice, however, it would not be difficult to explain to this public that Pomeroy has received much injustice. His crimes were bad enough, but the subject of the causes of his crime has always been hinted at publicly as unfit for public discussion. So it has happened that the whole subject has been unknown to the condemning public and Pomeroy has received the full force of complete opprobrium, whereas he has been in part deserving of sympathy. It may be centuries before some historian of American prisons will dare to present fully a view that the society which heaped such extreme punishment upon an individual was itself responsible for allowing an irresponsible defective his liberty, and then, terrified at what came to pass because of such neglect, not only locking the barn after the horse was stolen, but avenging itself upon the luckless individual.

In years to come Massachusetts will be no more proud of the way the state handled the case of this dangerous defective than Massachusetts is now proud that it once burned witches in Salem.

The case will some day—after the story of the crimes is forgotten—serve to illustrate the relations between vigorous public opinion and the execution of justice. Thinking so strongly of Pomeroy's crimes, the public little cared that he was a mere boy, fourteen years old, and was satisfied when a jury brought upon him the verdict to be hanged by the neck until dead. But this public did not know the whole story. With the pictures of reeking outrages in their eyes, the individuals who made up that public cared not for causes and psychological explanations. The governor and the governor's council, however, knew these details and spared the state the spectacle of hanging the child. Yet it was an unusual case, and the public demanded unusual vengeance. From this fact may be explained why the prisoner is now living under conditions more familiar to the days of the Bastile and in the unhappy fiction of Dumas and Balzac. With such circumstances born of high public feeling, it is little wonder, therefore, that officials who have this case thrust upon them discourage any publicity that will keep the subject rankling in public opinion.

Pomeroy is a survival. The judges who tried him, the attorney general and the district attorney who prosecuted him, the lawyer who defended him and the governor who spared his life—all have been dead many years. New governors, new keepers, year after year becoming responsible for his care, have inherited from their predecessors traditions regarding him. It is a custom, almost a secret compact, that so far as the public is concerned Pomeroy died thirty-three years ago. That he lives where the public is protected from him and where he is protected from the public is to official thinking a professional matter, a legal formality and a detail of prison routine exclusively the business of proper officials.

Inaccurate Stories.

Such officials, with the exception of Pomeroy's heart broken relatives, monopolize the personal facts of his existence. The relatives also bitterly oppose any publicity. In a recent petition to the governor asking for a pardon, the following statement was made:

"The sun never shines on his head; he cannot go to the chapel; he is denied association with human beings. The prisoner has had no opportunity here, and has been handicapped by the unfounded but persistent newspaper notoriety in the case."

The handicap of this publicity can justly be attributed only to the inaccuracy of public information and to the lack of a presentation of the complete facts. If the world really knew that Pomeroy's crimes came from a malady over which he had no control, and really knew what it means for a human being to be shut in a small cell without human association for thirty-three years, public opinion would probably ask executive authority to extend to the prisoner at least a few harmless privileges. His only hope is publicity of actual facts. If he has been handicapped or has suffered more severely than he has deserved the only remedy is publicity. If the public could actually understand Pomeroy through accurate publicity it is probable that instead of being hated he would be pitied, and that his declining years would end under restrictions more humane and more merciful.

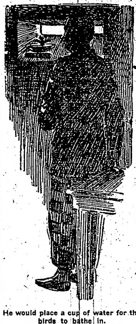
To explain what he is today it is necessary first to rehearse briefly the backgrounds of his life. Since Sept. 7, 1876, when he was seventeen years old, he has been denied the association even of other prisoners. He will be fifty yeras old on next Nov. 29. He was not yet thirteen years old when he was first taken into custody. Upon his confession of torturing and mutilating boys of four to six years of age he was sent to the reform school in Westboro Sept. 20, 1872. He was pardoned and released from this school on Feb. 6, 1874. Very soon after he killed and buried in the cellar of his father's store a little girl five years old.

On the following April 22, the blackest day in his history, he was arrested, charged with the atrocious slaughter of a five-year-old boy in South Boston. In September he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. He was not yet fifteen years old. The supreme court, without avail, reviewed his defense of insanity. On Aug. 31, 1876, after the governor's council had listened to a review of extenuating circumstances in his behalf, Gov. Rice commuted the sentence. The document under which Pomeroy is held reads:

"We do, by and with the advice of our council, grant to him, the said Jesse Harding Pomeroy, a commutation of the punishment which he is liable to endure by the aforesaid sentence to that of solitary imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison during his natural life."

"Solitary"—That one word in the decree differentiates Pomeroy's past thirty-three years from those of other "lifers."

His cell is the most sequestered in that isolated fortress within the prison yard known as Cherry Hill. It is in a wing built on the east of the main building, doorless except from the interior of the main building and conspicuous because its only windows are small square holes along its eaves, which look like ventilators in a cold storage house.



He would place a cup of water for the birds to bathe in.

That such a place must be wholesome is evidenced by Pomeroy's ordinary health and by the fact that his brown hair has not yet turned to gray. His pale and sallow face, however, shows that he lives in perpetual shadow. That his light must be better than might be expected is shown by the amount of reading he accomplishes with the use of only one eye. Vision with the other eye is obstructed by a white film, which with years has become almost opaque.

Customarily every day he sees nobody except the deputy in charge of Cherry Hill. This alert watchman constantly patrols the corridors and at frequent intervals noiselessly and suddenly peers at Pomeroy through the grating without engaging in needless conversation.

To the lone prisoner one day is like another. From morning till night, season after season, he reads and plans and studies. In pleasant weather his keeper can relieve his monotony somewhat by an hour of exercise in a small brick walled yard, the solitary's private garden. His meals are the regular prison fare, but he must eat them without knife or fork. Once a week he has the regulation bath. Once a month his aged mother—she is now nearing seventy years of age—is permitted to make him a brief visit. The governor, the governor's council and the prison commissioners see him on their yearly or sometimes more frequent visits to the prison. He rarely sees prison officials, except his keeper and the chaplain. The venerable chaplain provides him with reading.

Despite his sentence, Pomeroy has not labored for years. This is one rare subject upon which he can exercise his will, and he refuses to work. As this demonstration of will power is not known to other prisoners he is not compelled. It would be unprofitable trouble to force him.

He has practiced penmanship until his handwriting is beautifully perfect. It looks like Spencerian copperplate artfully shaded, firm, regular and small lettered.

He has the call of 8,000 books in the prison library and of about 500 from the chaplain's private collection. For thirty-three years he has read from them. Of late years he has outgrown a fondness for fiction and has spent most of his time with history and in the acquiring of foreign languages. He has a reading knowledge of Latin, German, French, Spanish, Italian and Arabic. Of his proficiency he alone knows; but with his lexicons he translates from the foreign books.

His favorite novels are Balzac and Dumas. At times he has read a German newspaper, presumably for practice in German, as he has practiced reading French newspapers. Ironical, as it seems, although his life is bounded by narrow walls, he finds a sustaining interest in a magazine of outdoor pastimes and princely country estates. He has said that if he were ever permitted his liberty he would get a farm in some isolated portion of Maine where he would raise poultry for the rest of his days.

Among the errors in newspaper accounts of Pomeroy a few may be corrected here. In keeping with the former public notion of the prisoner's crimes Pomeroy has been the victim of lurid accounts of how he has tortured and mutilated cats, birds and other pets. It need only be asked where he would get access to such animals in his cell. It is true that he once had a canary bird in his cell, but he cherished it highly. In the morning he would place a cup of water for the bird to bathe in, and then he would watch it as it spread its wings and made its way out of the prison into the sunshine. The bird would stay away about an hour at a time, While Pomeroy would meanwhile entertain himself in anticipating its return.

In Pomeroy's day science was not advanced in explaining such mysteries. The acts which he committed were not judged in this light. The boy was convicted on the basis of a criminal; and his deeeds were considered as the work of a fiend. The State of Massachusetts, which has recognized the scientific explanation of Jane Toppan's crimes, has placed Pomeroy in a felon's cell, where he has endured thirty-three years that have been centuries to him. Public opinion, which has been the great power behind the official working of justice, has not been in possession of a full knowledge of the prisoner. The public has never dreamed that Pomeroy may be no more responsible for his slaughter than is a blind man because he cannot see, a deaf man because his ears do not hear. The boy victim of an abnormal nature has grown to manhood in a cell without knowing why he had impulses whose performances lured him into a stone room for life. Therefore today the man sits in his cell ignorant of the boy he once was. He has outgrown the promptings of his boyhood. He has become a reasoning man. He is now at the age when serious reasoning is dominant. He has outgrown the emotion of his youth. His long years of study have developed his intellect, which in turn has usurped the dominancy of his body. Such a being as he is today, Pomeroy cannot accept his fate as justice. Unconscious of the wellsprings of his deeds, he has become a different being.

Unable to believe that the deeds of the boy were the deeds of his will, Pomeroy feels convinced that he was not responsible for what he did. The mature man, unwilling to accept responsibility for the boy of long ago, has thought out for himself a philosophy of fatalism. Powers over which he had no control, he argues, urged the helpless boy in the unfortunate course. He cannot see the ethics or the justice of a society that punishes him now. More than that, he cannot believe that there is a God that would allow injustice to be heaped upon him. For this reason Pomeroy refuses to tolerate the teachings of religion. He has no religious belief, no faith. He reasons that if there were a God, this superior force would not permit society to punish him.

In such a predicament, feeling himself a victim of fate, it is not remarkable that he has never been known to smile in thirty-three years. His mind all the years has been imbued with the plot of an almost classic tragedy in which he has been a part—an old Greek drama theme where a mortal is the helpless prey of superhuman fate.

THE MYSTERY OF SALLY

By CHARLES SLOAN REID.

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

Sally was a hired girl, the seventeenth since the baby came, about 13 months before. But we realized that at last we had found a treasure. Sally was inventive. The kaleidoscopic repertoire of amusement which she furnished for our tootsy-wootsy was something to command the admiration of the most callous-brained pessimist of the never smiles.

This aggregation of inventive genius had been purchased at a weekly installment of four dollars. Cheerfully, we should have made it five on demand, within a week after her arrival.

But Sally seemed to be devoid of the graft contamination, and, indeed, she spent her money like a lord, more than half of her weekly pay going for gimcracks of one kind or another for the amusement of our little one. A car ride to the park each day for the pleasure of our baby formed one of her personal extravagances. Baby soon became so much attached to her that "Mamma" was no longer interesting, except at certain periods during the day, and these periods Sally managed so cleverly that no disturbance came to the household serenity through baby's impatient demands.

One thing soon became apparent. Sally had the going habit. She wanted to be away from the house more than half of the time, but, as our little one always came back from these little excursions in excellent spirits, and, barring the harassing fears that Baby might contract some of the many contagious or infectious diseases of childhood—such as measles, chicken-pox, whooping-cough or some other horrifying thing—this habit of Sally's was not at all inconvenient to the household.

Another thing which recommended Sally was the habitual neatness of her person, and what became an interesting mystery to us was the matter of how she could spend from two or three dollars per week solely and unselfishly for the amusement of our little one, and dress herself with such taste on the remainder.

Wild Animal Tamer.

Finally we decided that Sally must be getting credit somewhere, and that we should raise her wages, in order that she might be enabled to meet her obligations.

But about this time I saw Sally emerging from a bank one day. I had been some distance away and unobserved by her.

"Ah," I exclaimed, under my breath, "she is borrowing of the bank."

The cashier of this bank was a particular friend of mine, and I determined to learn something of Sally's financial operations. This I had no trouble in doing, and soon learned to my amazement that Sally was not a borrower, but a depositor, to the extent of $40 or $50 a week.

My wife and I held a consultation over the matter, for the mystery had deepened. Why one who could indulge the daily extravagance of Sally, and yet deposit $40 per week, should hire herself out at a wage of four dollars per week was amazingly mysterious—and yet, Sally was not a thief. Not the smallest item of anything of value had been missed from the house, and no coins or bills ever were kept about the place.

So the mystery of Sally deepened. But, notwithstanding this, Sally was by incalculable odds the best nurse we ever had possessed, or ever could hope to have, and we determined that nothing should dispossess us of her services, no, not if it became necessary to raise her wages to ten dollars per week, which extravagance I could of course ill afford.

So Sally remained, keeping up her usual program, only inventing new means of amusement each day. How long we should have kept her I do ont know. But accident plays a large part in the movement of human affairs, and it was an accident which led to the separation of our Sally from us.

An employe from our mills had been seriously crushed in a dray collision over on the East side, and I had gone over to investigate the responsibility for the accident. This matter being soon concluded, I was returning to the office when I met Jenkins, a friend of mine. Jenkins likes a faker, or a side show performance better than anything; and the East side was noted for its attraction for fakers and showmen of one kind or another.

"Hello old man!" called Jenkins from across the street, "wait a moment."

I waited and Jenkins came over.

"Do you know," he began, "I have found one of the smoothest artists in tho show line down here that I've seen in a long while?"

"What's his class?" I asked.

"Wild animal tamer, and he has been playing to crowded houses here for the past six weeks. You want to see this, especially the afternoon performance, at which time he gives an extraordinary feature."

He was leading, and we soon came to the entrance way of a large tent which occupied a portion of the area usually taken up by the showmen. Outside were a number of big posters announcing, both by word and illustration, the wonderful feats performed by the man inside, among them being one which was especially horrifying—this being announced in big letters as the special afternoon feature. Jenkins had secured tickets and was hurrying me inside.

Our seats proved to be in a good position, and we had not long to wait for the beginning of the show. The performer soon appeared in the caged arena, and the various features of the program were passing before us. Tigers, leopards and lions, one after another, had been introduced, and at last King Leo, a tremendous lion, stood beside his master in the arena.

"Now we get the star performance," whispered Jenkins.

The showman advanced to the front of the cage, where he opened a small wicket window.

"Now," he began, "if some mother in the audience will bring her baby for a few moments, I will show you that Leo will hold the little one in his great mouth as tenderly as its mother can hold it in her arms. Trust me, some mother—your little one shall receive no harm whatever."

"We have only to wait a moment," declared Jenkins. "There is a young woman in the audience who furnishes the baby each afternoon; and Torrelli, the showman, pays her ten dollars on the side after each performance."

"Horrors!" I exclaimed.

And just at this moment the young woman arose from somewhere near the front and advanced, with the baby in her arms. I got one glimpse of them—and the next instant I was on my feet, though almost transfixed in my indignation. The woman was our Sally—and the baby was our boy.

I summoned strength enough to draw my revolver, and the man who was not afraid of the whole African jungle cowered before my aim. In the meantime I somehow reached the side of Sally and seized my boy in my arms, allowing Sally to make a precipitous exit.

No doubt she is now working her scheme in some other city where Torrelli is showing. And we—well, we are not requiring the services of a nurse any more. Also, we are seriously thinking of calling our boy Daniel, the little one having been delivered from the lion's mouth, you know.

Taking It Out in Trade.

The moral of the story printed below, which is quoted from the New York Tribune, is that a young man who contemplates changing his occupation or position should take care that the bargain he makes with his new employer is definite. There is also another moral—for employers.

The proprietor of a certain Turkish bath establishment, seeing a strong-looking young man working in a butchers' shop, and being impressed by his magnificent muscles, told him to resign and take a rubber's position with him.

"I'll give you more than you are getting now," he said.

The young butcher, resigning in good faith, turned up the next morning at the bath-house.

"Well," said the proprietor to him, "I'll put you on at once. What did you get at the butcher's?"

"Six dollars and my week's meat," returned the young man.

"What did that amount to?"

"About three dollars."

"Well," said the proprietor, "I offered you more to come here, didn't I? I'll give you six dollars in money and four dollars' worth of baths weekly. That is a dollar more than you got at your old place."—Youth's Companion.

Heart Disease.

Hereafter let us require every contestant in a Marathon to be examined before the start, to see if his heart is in a condition to stand a strain. Hearts are not as tough as they used to be. Too much high living and low thinking. The heart used to be leathery; now it is more or less like vulcanized rubber. It weakens when appealed to. Its expansive and contractile powers are not what they were when we fought the Indians in the forest or chased the wild archozauras over the foot-hills. Instead of being elastic, we have in a certain sense become plastic. Before entering into a Marathonic competition, boys, take a trip through a new Hudson river tunnel, pass through the compressed air chamber, and test your heart. If you can survive McAdoo or Jacobs you can run 98 miles in a day. —New York Press.

The Age of Specializing.

This is the age of specializing. There is such an accumulation of knowledge gathered about every subject or vocation that it becomes the earnest work of lifetime to grasp it all. Take the subject of electricity, for instance. When I was a boy I went to a science class and passed several examinations in the science of electricity. To-day I am told—and I firmly believe it—that the knowledge which gained me certificates, and perhaps prizes, a score of years ago, is now either superseded or left far behind by the marvelous discoveries and additions to this wonderful science. I should have to learn its alphabet again to-day. And it is so with most things. Constant effort and earnest purpose are required to keep pace with one subject.—A. B. Cooper, in "The Scholars' Own."

Of Course He Enjoyed It.

"A foggy day in London, they say, means that the residents are compelled to run up a gas bill of from $50,000 to $75,000," remarked the New York broker.

"I enjoy a foggy day over there, old chap," said the Englishman with the monocle.

"Enjoy it?"

"Yes, enjoy it. You see, I'm a stockholder in a London gas corporation." —Yonkers Stateman.

My doctors said I would have to be tapped, but I began using Doan's Kidney Pills instead, and the swelling subsided and the kidneys began to act properly. Now my health is fine." A young couple entered a railway carriage and were immediately put down as a bridal pair. But they were remarkably self-possessed, and behaved with such sangfroid that the other passengers began to doubt.

As the train moved out, the young man rose to take off his overcoat, and a shower of rice fell out. The passengers smiled broadly.

But even that did not effect the youth, who also smiled, and, turning to his partner, remarked audibly: "By Jove, May! I've stolen the bridegroom's overcoat!"

"About fifteen or eighteen years ago eczema developed on top of my hand. It burned and itched so much that I was compelled to show it to a doctor. He pronounced it ringworm. After trying his different remedies the disease increased and went up my arms and to my legs and finally on my face. The burning was something terrible. I went to another doctor who had the reputation of being the best in town. He told me it was eczema. His medicine checked the advance of the disease, but no further. I finally concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies and found relief in the first trial. I continued until I was completely cured from the disease, and I have not been troubled since. C. A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE

Of Painting Requirements Will Save Much Expense.

When one sees the surface of a house or other building scaling, or peeling, or spotted or blistered, or showing other symptoms of paint "disease," it is evident that a poor painter has been on the job, and that poor paint was used—or possibly that a good painter had been dominated by a property-owner who knew nothing about paint.

It is an easy matter to be informed on paint and painting. A complete painting guide, including a book of color schemes, either for exterior or interior—specifications for all kinds of painting,—and an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint material, with directions for using it, may be had free by writing National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York City, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49.

Then, every houseowner should make it a point to get only well-known reliable brands in buying his materials. Pure white lead is especially important, or the paint will not prove satisfactory. The famous "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark of National Lead Company, the largest makers of pure white lead, is an absolute guarantee of the purity and quality of the white lead sold under it. That trademark is a safeguard against paint trouble.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles, causing backache, irregularities, dizziness and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk upstairs without stopping on the way. I tried three different doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them, but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said nothing would restore my health. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, Box 299, Willimantic, Conn.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

THE HEAD ON THE PENNY

Die Supposed to Represent an Indian Was Really Made From Woman's Face.

Have you ever noticed the features of the head on the American penny? An Indian's head, you say. You are wrong—at least if the claim of friends of the man who made the copper die is true. The face is a woman's.

But, you say, there are feathers on the head. Is that not the headgear of an Indian?

Ah, but you have observed the features, the contour of the face? Reach into your pocket and look at the copper coin. Are those the features of an Indian? says the Detroit Times-Tribune.

When the engraver made the die that is used in turning out the popular 1-cent coin he used the face of his daughter, and that is why a woman's face adorns the penny.

Observe the long, thin, delicate nose, the low forehead, the essentially feminine lips. Then regard the picture of Mrs. Sarah Longacre Keen—mark the resemblance! Mrs. Keen, when a girl, is said to have furnished the model for the head of the cent.

Mrs. Keen died in Philadelphia in January, 1906. For more than thirty years she had been corresponding secretary of the Women's Foreign Missionary society. Her entire life was devoted to religious work. She was a sweet and saintly woman.

How, you ask, was her face chosen to present Liberty—impersonated as an Indian face—on the coin?

The story was first told by a missionary who knew Mrs. Keen. During her lifetime she rarely spoke of the interesting fact—only after her death was the story revealed.

Her father, James Barton Longacre, was an engraver. He worked in the Philadelphia mint, where the die for the cent was made. Sarah, his first child, was a slight and beautiful girl when he made the stamp of the pennies we now use.

Sarah was his pride. She was, for her age, tall supple and beautiful. Her face was sweet and refined. What was more natural than that when he engraved the die he should transfer to it the classic features of the child he so loved?

Mrs. Keen was born in Philadelphia Feb. 20, 1828. At the age of fifteen she was converted in the Union Methodist Episcopal church at a revival meeting at which were 200 conversions.

She was married at the age of nineteen, on May 6, 1847, to John F. Keen. Her married life was ideal. The couple lived happily for forty-four years, when Mr. Keen died.

The woman whose face is said to grace the cent was a thoroughly religious woman; she was imbued with the Christian spirit.

About the time of her marriage the mother of Mrs. Keen became deeply interested in the work of Dr. Walter and Mrs. Phoebe Palmer, who preached the doctrine of living upon higher planes in the daily life. In the winter of 1848 Mrs. Keen's mother began a series of "Tuesday meetings." There pious women met, prayed and told one another how they overcame their temptations and met their struggles.

The meetings continued for thirty-eight years. And they did not end at Mrs. Longacre's death. Mrs. Keen's father continued holding them, and when he passed away Mrs. Keen, with her brother, the Rev. Andrew Longacre, took his place.

Mrs. Keen at this time lived near Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia. There had been visitors to her home, and she was rearing quite a family of children. Despite her family duties on Sundays, she gathered the children of neighboring farmers to her home, and there unfolded to them the Bible in her simple, motherly way.

Each Sunday evening she invited the parents of the children to her home, and led a prayer meeting. And every Thursday afternoon she held a class meeting in Haines' church.

Foreign missionary work always appealed to Mrs. Keen, and in 1870 she became corresponding secretary of the branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society in her city. She resigned only a few months before her death.

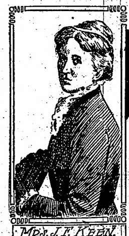
Even while she lay ill in bed, scarcely able to move, Mrs. Keen dictated letters to missionaries. Some she advised, others she enthused, encouraged, begging them not to despair or give up their endeavors. Her letters always possessed the peculiar personal appeal; they were inspiring and devotional.

After her death a missionary, Laura M. White, wrote:

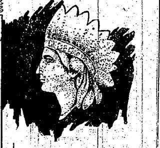
"Many a time in China I contrasted the crisp, formal, business communications sent by heads of other missions to their missionaries, with the loving, tender letters of counsel and help that always came from my own dear missionary mother.

"How indulgent she was to us! Never was request made that she did not try to grant; and if that were impossible, the kindness and sympathy that came instead more than made up for the disappointment.

"It was always easy to confess to her the trials and disappointments, the mistakes and failures of missionary life. And, in return, she dared tell us our faults and weaknesses, at the same time covering them by her mantle of charity from the gaze of others."



MRS. J. F. KEEN.



Perfectly Equipped.

When the large and healthy looking individual who had asked at the door for "a little something to eat" was told that he might if he would work a while at the woodpile, he shook his head mournfully.

"I've got the ague," he explained, "and my hand is that unstidy I couldn't hit more'n one stick in seven."

"All right," exclaimed the mistress of the house. "Go out in the back yard and shake those ashes for me."

The Man Next Door Was Right.

"Sir," requested the young man, entering with a suit on his arms, "I've brought these clothes for you to press. The men next door say you are a bird at pressing suits."

"Well, the men next door are right," replied the spit presser, "only this isn't a tailor shop—it's a lawyer's office."

Too many people make the mistake of putting up their future happiness as collateral for the loan of a few dollars.

AEROPLANES OF THE FUTURE.

A Combination of the American and French Machines Predicted.

Theoretically the problem of flight may now be completely solved, we are told by M. Painleve, a recent lecturer before the French Astronomical society in Paris. From this point of view, however, the solution, he says, is like a treasure in a chest so difficult to unlock that years might be required to get at it. The owner would be very apt to take an ax, and this is what experimenters like Wright and Farman have done in abandoning mathematical analysis for actual tests.

Painleve thinks that the aeroplane has demonstrated its superiority to the dirigible balloon, which he regards as costly and useless, being incapable of further improvement. In this opinion he is at variance with most writers on the subject, who look upon these two types of flyers as destined to development along different lines and for distinct uses. The lecturer drew an interesting distinction between the American school of mechanical flight, as represented by the Wrights and the French school. The former, he says, must keep constantly maneuvering in order to balance, which is hard on the pilot; the latter depends on an automatic system of equilibrium. The American aeroplane is more supple and is more easily managed, but he considers the French safer. Probably the standard machine of the future will combine the advantages of both.

First Freedmen in the Army.

The first muster of freedmen into the United States army occurred on Nov. 7, 1862, at Gen. Saxton's headquarters in Beaufort, S. C. It was on the first anniversary of the capture of Port Royal and at the time of the organization of the department of the South.

Capt. James had his men drawn up in line, and as he read the names from the roll each man answered "Here." Then with uncovered heads and right hands raised the men took the usual oath of allegiance, which was administered by Gen. Saxton. This simple ceremony over, the newly made soldiers marched back to their camp.

A Sharp Retort.

"My dear," said a thin little Brighton man to his wife, "this paper says that there is a woman down in Devonshire who goes out and chops wood with her husband."

"Well, what of it? I think she could easily do it if he is as thin as you are. I have often thought of using you to peel potatoes with."

The thin man laid down his paper with a sigh that sounded like the squeak of a penny whistle.

Surely Not.

Jimmie (aged five)—I'm goin' to have a birthday party tomorrow at 6 o'clock 'cause I was born at 6 on the first o' May. When were you born, Bobbie?

Bobbie (aged six)—I was born at 11 o'clock on—

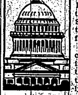
Jimmy (interrupting)—O-oh! Bobbie! You know your mother wouldn't let you sit up that late!

One secret of success is the early discovery that you can't do [illegible] thing.

ALL FOR A DOLLAR

SEEING WASHINGTON FROM THE RUBBER-NECK MOTOR.

"Humor" Handed Out in Large Chunks, But the Visitors Are a Somewhat Unappreciative Lot and Refuse to Laugh.



The managers of the Washington rubberneck motor car advertise that it costs a dollar to "see Washington." They're mistaken. You get your dollar's worth from the spieler's jokes. Seeing Washington is thrown in for good measure.

The man in charge of the waiting room takes the whole proposition most seriously, which, after all, is quite the correct view, as you discover after the first few minutes of navigation.

"The company supplies all the trimmings?" you inquire as you buy the ticket. "There's a good spieler to tell us all about it?"

"We employ an exceedingly competent lecturer, sir," is the reproving reply, "to describe the places of interest that the car passes, including the former homes of Dolly Madison, Charles Sumner and Daniel Webster, as well as the British embassy, the—"

Whereupon you flee, leaving him still talking.

The lecturer proves to be a slender young man, with a scraggly mustache, a serious face, a mouth very full of teeth and a voice out of all proportion to the rest of his person.

The lecture proceeds with ease and precision. You might almost think yourself listening to a Burton Holmes travelogue in Convention hall, when, without warning, with no change of voice, tone or expression:

"Upon the left the brick house directly opposite is the home of Speaker Cannon. You will observe the conspicuous chimneys upon the ends. They are to furnish drafts for Uncle Joe's cigars."

It's all so extremely serious that nobody ventures a smile. Very likely nobody has noticed it. The monotone goes on:

"Directly in front of the au-to-mobile is the Army and Navy club, the haunt of veterans of bottles and battles."

More serious gazes.

"We are approaching," the spieler continues, after a moment's delay, "the city home of John R. McLain. Observe the jail-like effect of the house. I leave it to you to decide how long he is in for."

The motor crowd is unmoved.

"The house upon the right was designed by a woman. There are people mean enough to say it looks it."

Not a ripple.

"In the bureau of engraving and printing yonder where the currency is made, a single dollar bill is said to be counted 54 times. That probably accounts for why it is so difficult to get."

The audience is glummer than before. Apparently the solemnity has worked in so that everybody is afraid to talk.

"The house on the corner—not the one with the i-ron bars"—it is one of the rules of the spielers' union to say "i-ron"—"is the home of Representative and Mrs. Longworth. Mrs. Longworth is the president's daughter. It is understood that she will have the color of the ivy on the house changed soon to Alice blue."

The car is on the verge of tears. For the first time the spieler takes official cognizance of the attitude toward his witticisms.

"I may say here," he continues, still solemn, "that there are no blue laws in the District of Columbia. The lid is off. You may laugh with impunity at jokes."

"We may," says the man in the back seat, "but we can't. Drive on."

But the lecturer hasn't even noticed him. His expression never varies.

"The large building with brass railings immediately to the left—"

There's a man who will make his mark some day unless they catch him and bury him under a government job.

Society Girl Chooses Stage.

Much interest is being displayed in Washington social circles in the forthcoming appearance of Miss Flora Wilson, daughter of the secretary of agriculture, in concert this season. She has given up a social career as a cabinet hostess for a professional career. From the concert stage this season she expects to progress to the grand opera stage next season. She has for five years been a diligent pupil of Jean de Reszke, the great tenor, in Paris, and has prepared herself for grand opera with a repertory of many operas. Although she has been home for four weeks, she has taken no part in any affairs given for her father, and has allowed none to be given for her, as she is observing the strictest discipline as to her health and strength for her concert appearances in the spring. She will be heard here about the middle of the month.

"Presidential Station."

Through a vestibule at the north end of the new Union depot at the capital the presidential suite communicates direct with the train shed and concourse—this latter having dimensions 754 by 130 feet, being, it is claimed, large enough to accommodate the entire standing army of the United States. Trains enter this $20,000,000 station on 33 tracks, but Station Master Robey, the "Master of Ceremonies" of the "Presidential Station," plans to always have the presidential specials use the track at the eastern end of the yard nearest the state suite, which will necessitate but a short walk from cars to carriages for the presidential party.

How to Go and Forget.

I know how to hold
As the lovers of old—
How to cling to you, sing to you,
Let all the world know the song that I bring to you,
But I do not know yet
How to go and forget.

I know how to call
To the God over all—
How to sigh for you, cry for you,
Fight down the terrible dark till I die for you,
But I do not know yet
How to go and forget.

Prudence Smith and Zabed Winters met at spelling school and were impressed with each other. Zabed would have married her if the Widow Penrose hadn't mixed in. She wanted the young man for herself, and in awesome whispers she imparted the information that Prudence Smith was knockkneed and would never be able to stand at a washtub or run up and down the cellar stairs. The young man was at once impressed. He ceased to spark Prudence on Sunday nights and assure her that he longed to jump over precipices for her sake, and of course she resented it. She went about with her chin in the air and asked for no explanations, and so relations were strained for many long months. Then Zabed's mother found out what was the matter with him and set him right. The widow had lied. Zabed made it up with the girl. The doves came back again and turtled, a new date was set for the marriage, and Farmer Smith reached out his horny hand for a shake and said:

"Zabed, gol durn your buttons, you're gittin' the real thing, and you orter be the happiest man in Woodchuck county."

Zabed was for about two weeks. Then Deacon Gray, who was a widower and wanted Prudence for his second wife, gave up some information about Zabed. When he had sworn her to the most awful secrecy he confessed that the young man had a live frog in his stomach and would probably go mad within two years and cut the throat of his wife if he had one. The frog had jumped down Zabed's throat one day when he was drinking from the horse pond, and, though thousands of inducements had been held out to him, nothing could prevail upon him to jump out.

Well, where is the young girl, no matter how her heart tunks with love, who is going to marry a young man with a live and growing frog in his stomach? She can't be found. She wasn't found in this case. Prudence Smith cooled off on Zabed Winters, and he went about with his chin in the air and was too proud to ask for an explanation. It was a year before one came. Then a lightning rod man stayed overnight at Smith's, and after supper he got to talking about frogs. Seeing he was posted on the subject, Prudence made bold to ask him if he had ever heard of a frog taking up inside quarters, and he answered that such a thing was absolutely impossible and beyond belief. Zabed Winters had probably swallowed a small fish and the fish might be growing, but if left alone he could in time be fished for and caught. That settled the frog question, and Zabed was invited to come around and make up. He got a hustle on him, and the turtledoves sang soft and low, a new date was appointed, and Farmer Smith stopped chopping wood long enough to extend a hand and say:

"Zabed, you gol durned idiot, don't you know when you've got a good thing? Don't fool around any more."

Zabed didn't want to, but before it had been decided which minister should marry them old Mrs. Snyder struck his trail. She was too old to marry, but not too old to utter a warning for the benefit of a young man who had put in a day hoeing her garden and refused to take pay for it. She told him right straight out that Prudence Smith snored like a steam engine, that she had six toes on her right foot and only four on her left, that she had had St. Vitus' dance when a baby and that it was sure to come back on her some day. It might not be a year after marriage that Zabed would come up from the cornfield some afternoon and find her dancing all around the dooryard and kicking as high as a fence. That settled Zabed. He wanted Prudence, but he didn't want a dancing dervish. More coldness, more strained relations. It was a full year before old Mrs. Snyder was proved a liar, and it took three months longer to make up and set another date. Things had run smoothly to within a fortnight of the date when a tin peddler came along and bought a sheepskin of Zabed and then told him that Prudence Smith was deaf in the right ear, nearsighted in both eyes and would be tongue tied before she was two years older. Zabed hadn't noticed the deafness or blindness, but he believed in tin peddlers and at once grew frigid. Result, another year lost.

Fate was still in the game, however, and when everybody, including the two principals, had made up their minds that there would be no marriage she came loafing around to do her duty. Farmer Smith and his daughter were in the village one day buying calico and brown sugar when Zabed Winters appeared. He had eggs to sell for hickory shirting. The lovers were brought face to face, but they didn't speak. They thought of frogs and St. Vitus' dance and six toed feet and were turning away when Father Smith reached out one hand for his daughter and the other for Zabed and said:

"Say, are you two gol durned idiots?"

"Um!" replied Prudence.

"Um!" replied Zabed.

"If you wasn't you'd come along with me to the preacher and git married and hev this tarnashun thing settled to once and fur good and all."

Prudence looked at Zabed.

Zabed looked at Prudence.

Then they smiled and edged up nearer each other, and an hour later they were man and wife.

Thief River Lobbyists Have Nothing to Show Except Expense Account.

Red Lake Falls won a substantial victory in the legislature yesterday when the house passed the Robertson bill, providing for the redistricting of commissioner districts.

The original bill read as follows:

"Each county shall be divided into as many districts, numbered consecutively, as it has members of the Board. In counties divided into towns such districts shall be bounded by town or ward lines, be composed of contiguous territory and contain as nearly as practicable an equal population. Counties may be redistricted by the County Board after each state or United States census (and any County in which there is one or more townships not within any commissioner district as now established shall be redistricted in the manner above required within six months after the passage of this act) One commissinner shall be elected in each such district, who at the time of his election shall be a resident thereof and continue to reside therein while in office."

On motion of Representative Gates of Goodhue county the bill was amended to take effect December 10, 1910; which leaves the law practically as it is at present. The law now provides that each county shall be redistricted after each state or national census.

The Thief River lobby is very much disappointed over the result, as they have worked all winter to secure the passage of a bill requiring Red Lake county to be redistricted at once.

Building Railroads.

Duluth papers state that there is no doubt that the Duluth to Winnipeg, via Thief River Falls, line of the Soo will be constructed in the year 1910. President Pennington is reported as having said that no work will be done this fall owing to the desire to do some other railroad construction, but the work will be done next year. The new 250 miles of road, if con strcuted, will strike east fro m Thief River Falls and the first construction will be across Red Lake county to the Indian reservation. Two surveys have been made from there; one north of Red Lake, the other to the southward, through Beltrami county and north of Lake Winnibegoshish, thence south and east through Itasca, Aitkin and Carlton counties, to a junction near Duluth with the Brooton-Duluth line.

FIRST BALL GAME.

High School Team Will Take on East Grand Forks.

The first ball game of the season on the local grounds will be played Saturday, April 24, when the local high school team will compete with a team representing the East Grand Eorks high school. It promises to be a good game and the ball enthusiasts should get out and "root for the home team."

A game was scheduled for Saturday with the Thief River Falls high school team, but owing to the illness of Theodore Garceau, Red Lake Falls' wing artist, it was necessary to cancel the game.

THAT CHANGE IN TRAIN SERVICE

May Go Into Effect Next Week —If Not, Soon After That Date.

If you see it in The Gazette it is so—most always, anyhow. That change in passenger service that The Gazette talked about several weeks ago, when most people believed that The Gazette did not know what it was talking about, is a sure thing.

When the change goes into effect the trains will run on about the same schedule as before the change after the construction of the Warroad extension. There will be two crews instead of one and the northbound train will arrive at about 10:25 a. m., and the southbound at about 25:5 p. m.

It is quite probable that the change will go into effect next week, but if not then, a week later. The change has been decided upon; the time has not been definitely announced.

Makes an Assignment.

E. Chatel, who has conducted a grocery store for some time, has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. Mr. Chatel has been financially embarrassed for some time and he believed that the claims of creditors could be better taken care of if his property were placed in the hands of a trustee. H. H. Zaiser has been appointed trustee and the store is closed while an inventory is being taken. The store will be opened for business in a few days. It is not known at this time just what are the assets and liabilities.

Free Seed Corn.

P. B. Gaass has at his office a limited amount of seed corn that will be distributed to farmers free of cost. The corn is supplied by the Crookston agricultural school and one of the conditions of the free distribution is that the farmer receiving corn return to the school a few ears of corn to be used in the Red Lake county entries in the corn contests, state and national. It is the desire of the school authorities that the corn be distributed as far as possible to farmers in whose families there are boys of school age.

The old fashioned way of dosing a weak stomach, or stimulating the heart or kidneys is all wrong. Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. This is why his prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed entirely to the cause of these ailments, the weak inside or controlling nerves. It isn't so difficult, says Dr. Shoop, to strengthen a weak stomach, heart or kidneys, if one goes at it correctly. Each inside organ has its controlling nerve. When these nerves fail then those organs must surely falter. These vital truths are leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Test it a few days and see! Improvement will promptly and surely follow. Sold by all dealers.

SUIT AGAINST CITY.

Phone Company Wants Use of Streets at Thief River.

Thief River News: The mayor, members of the city council and other city officials were on Monday served with papers in mandamus proceedings instituted by the Northwestern Telephone company against the city for the pur pose of extending its lines in the city for long distance purposes.

Several weeks ago request was made of the city council by the Northwestern company for a permit to extend its lines in the city so as to give long distance service to the Finch-Winslow-Carlisle Wholesale house, the Hanson-Barzon Milling company and the four banks. This request was refused by the city council and now the mandamus proceedings are instituted.

In a former suit which was carried to the state supreme court, this company contended that it had a right to establish a local exchange here, but now it is only demanding the use of the streets for long distance purposes.

SHORT NEWS ITEMS

John Gunderson of St. Hilaire walked down to Red Lake Falls Saturday morning and took the train back to St. Hilaire the same morning. Mr. Gunderson has seen seventy summers and as many winters, but says he is no older than he feels, and he feels as young a sa colt.

Mr. Elmquist, railroad and warehouse commissioner, A. C. Clauson, secretary of the commission, and Supt. Allen of the Great Northern went north in a special car Monday. They were bound for Strathcona where it is necessary to adjust some matters regarding railway service.

C. A. Lindquist came to town Tuesday and took the Great Northern train for Grand Forks on important business, involving the title to a carload of hay shipped to the Forks by Mr. Lindquist. The hay was shipped in the name of another, and Grand Forks people are trying to hold the hay as the property of the person in whose name it was shipped.

A team belonging to Mr. Hanley, who lives west of town, indulged in a lively runaway Wednesday afternoon. The horses started from the Guerin livery barn, Mr. Hanley and his son being in the wagon at the time. Mr. Hanley was thrown out and quite badly bruised, though not seriously injured. The boy hung to the lines and enjoyed—though that term probably does not properly describe his feelings—a very fast ride down main street and over the Great Northern track. He finally guided the team to a post in front of the Healy residence and the horses came to a sudden stop, doing some injury to the harness and wagon.

J. W. Wheeler, a prominent Crookston banker, who has just returned from a business trip in Illinois said the following to a Crookston Journal reporter, the other day: "The people of Illinois are looking toward the Red River Valley. They are more fully convinced than ever before that we have what they want. Not only that but the wholesale houses of Chicago and the east want more business than they are getting in this section because they know that their money is good here. I think there is every reason to believe that we are going to enjoy a season of prosperity in this section such as has not been experienced for several years."

NEW STATE LAW LIMITING SALOONS

Ultimately There Will be Only One Saloon for Each 500 People.

The bill below, under which saloon licenses will hereafter be granted, makes it impossible for the city of Red Lake Falls to favorably consider applications for additional saloon licenses until the number of saloons has dropped below four. We have now seven saloons, but they will not be disturbed by this law. Should one of the proprietors retire from business, however, a license cannot be issued to anyone else as long as the maximum number of four saloons still remains.

As there seems to be considerable misunderstanding as to the provisions of the new law recently passed by limiting the number of saloons, we herewith publish the law in its entirety:

A BILL, for an act to limit the granting of licenses for sale of intoxicating liquors:

Be it enacted by the Legislature of Minnesota.

Sec. 1 From and after the passage of this act the number of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors which may be granted by any county or municipality shall be one for each five hundred of population or fraction thereof in any township, town, village or city of this state, such population to be determined by the last preceeding state or national census; provided, however, that in all such cities, villages, towns and townships where a greater number of licenses may have been granted or issued at the time of the passage of this act, than would be permissible under the foregoing limitation, it shall be lawful, and the local authorities are hereby authorized in their discretion, to grant and issue licenses equal in number to those granted or issued at the time of the passage of this act, but no additional licenses in number shall be granted or issued in any city, village, town or township until the increase in population thereof brings the same within the foregoing limitation, whereupon additional licenses may be granted from time to time to lawful appications, upon compliance by such applicants with the laws of this state then in force, until the total number of licenses in force in any township, town, village or city shall equal one for each five hundred of population or fraction thereof, as ascertained by the last preceding state or national census.

Sec. 2. Whenever any county municipality, in which no licenses exist, shall at any time hereafter, grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, it shall be lawful for such county municipailty to grant licenses only to a number of one for every five hundred of population or fraction thereof, in any twonship, town, village or city, as ascertained by the then last preceding state or national census, and no more, until the increase in popualtion thereot brings the same within the limitation of one for each five hundred of population or fraction thereof, as ascertained by the then last preceding state or national census, whereupon additional licenses may be granted from time to time, to lawful applicants upon compliance by such applicants with the law of this state, then in force; provided that the respective local authorities may grant one license in any township, town or municipality having less than five hundred of population.

Sec. 3. Whenever any town or municipality in which licenses have been granted to the time of the passage of this act, shall at any time hereafter vote "no license," under the provisions of the local option laws of this state, or the provisions of any municipal charter, as the case may be, and such town or municipality shall at any time, after voting "no license," again vote for license," under the law of this state, or the provisions of any municipal charter, as the case may be, the number of licenses which may then and thereafter be granted within such town or municipality shall, in no time, exceed one, for each five hundred of population or fraction thereof, as ascertained by the then last preceding state or national census; provided that one license may be granted in any town or municipality having less than five hundred of population.

Sec. 4. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as repealing or modifying existing local option laws.

Sec. 5 This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Take your sour stomach—or maybe you call it indegestion, dyspepsia, gastritis or catarrh of the stomch; it does not matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to the Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your stomach misery.

The correct name for your trouble is food fermentation—food souring; the digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nauseau, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in month, constiptaion, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness and many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself, after your next meal, that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong.

Stop this fermentation and begin eating of what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin. 27-30

A. A. LEDEBOER DEAD.

Was Prominent Business Man Here Many Years Ago.

A. A. Ledeboer, who will be remembered by many of the older inhabitants of the city, died at White Earth, where he was in the service of the United States government, April 1. The funeral was held April 3.

More than twenty years ago, when the principal portion of the business section of the city was on the north side of the river, Mr. Ledeboer was a prominent business man of Red Lake Falls. He conducted a large general store in the Kretchmar block, a large brick building which has since been torn down.

Deceased is survived by his widow and five children, four sons and one daughter, all grown.

Rosing is Dead.

Leonard A. Rosing, chairman of the state board of control, died yesterday morning at his home in St. Paul, after along illness. Mr. Rosing was one of the prominent men of the state. He was private secretary to Governor Lind, and was the democratic candidate for Governor in 1902. The funeral will be held at Cannon Falls tomorrow.

STATE TREASURER WILL BE SPEAKER

Hon. Clarence C. Dinehart Will Deliver Commencement Address to Class of '09.

Hon. Clarence C. Dinehart, state treasurer, has promised to deliver the commencement address to the graduating class of the Red Lake Falls high school on Friday evening, June 4. Mr. Dinehart has the well-earned reputation of being one of the best speakers in the state, and the school board is to be congratulated upon securing him.

Mr. Dinehart has been suggested in many quarters as a candidate for governor on the republican ticket next year, and if he is really courting the goddess of political fate Red Lake Falls is a good place to launch the boom. Governor Johnson's Fourth of July speech in Red Lake Falls five years ago is often referred to as the start of the wave of sentiment in his favor.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

REVIEW OF THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE STATE LEGISLATORS FOR THE WEEK.

St. Paul, April 1.—The anti-trading stamp bill, already passed in the senate, passed the house yesterday by a vote of 105 to 2. The bill will go into effect as soon as it is signed by the governor. The bill does not absolutely prohibit giving trading stamps, but requires stamps to have their value printed on their face, and makes unlawful the present method of compelling the women to lick a whole book full of stamps before they can get any presents.

The house yesterday failed to pass the so-called Leavett bill. An attempt to pass it under suspension of the rules was voted down. The bill would compel the governor to reappoint any Civil war veteran who holds state office.

The following bills were passed: Relating to affidavit for bias of judge; authorizing county boards to pay half cost of certain bridges heretofore constructed; regulating trading stamps; providing for the taxation of water power on basis of used horsepower.

In the Senate.

After the greatest amount of jockeying on a bill this session, the senate yesterday, after a long afternoon's debate, passed the Putnam bill extending aid to county high schools, graded, semi-graded and consolidated schools, which teach agriculture and domestic science. The bill carries an appropriation of $50,000 for the next two years, enough for ten schools each year. The passage of this measure commits the senate to a county scheme of agricultural education. One school in each county is to be equipped, together with a five-acre tract for the cultivation of farm products.

After adopting a motion to adjourn until Monday morning the senate accepted the invitation of the Duluth Commercial club and other bodies to visit the iron range before taking action on the tonnage tax.

The bill limiting the salary of the secretary of the state fair board to $3,600 was reported by the committee on compensation of public officials yesterday, with an amendment cutting the limit to $2,500.

The last effort to give the women of the state a chance to vote was made in the senate yesterday when Senator Sageng attempted to secure a reconsideration of the vote whereby his bill relating to the subject was killed by the committee of the whole on Monday. The vote for reconsideration was 29 to 26.

Senator Thorpe's bill cutting the governor's salary to $5,000, the figure at which it was when the present senators entered the body, was reported for passage by the finance committee yesterday.

Bills passed: Prescribing right of villages regarding incorporation of territory; authorizing renewal of charter to operate turnpikes; legalize proceedings to extend life of corporation in certain cases; relating to appropriation money for a bridge.

St. Paul, April 2.—Without a dissenting vote the senate yesterday passed the amended Works bill authorizing boards of freeholders in cities operating under home charters to incorporate in such charters provisions for the commission form of government. As amended the bill includes St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. Every senator present voted for the bill.

The senate passed the bill granting pensions not to exceed $10 a month to citizen soldiers who participated in the Indian wars of 1862.

A petition adopted by 8,000 St. Paul people at a Gipsy Smith meeting protesting against the passage of the club bill was received in the senate and referred to the committee on municipal corporations. The bill against which the protest is aimed was reported for passage several days ago.

The senate passed a bill giving the tax commission authority to employ a trained assessor to adjust assessments of any city or county where a complaint is made by the proper authorities that the values are not properly adjusted.

Other bills passed in the senate were: Requiring all boats on lakes and rivers to be equipped with lights; deficiency appropriation for public school libraries; authorizing railroad and warehouse commission to keep physical valuation of railroads up to date; requiring licensing of all ticket agents; establishing a board of audit for state fair.

In the House.

The bill increasing the permanent tax levy of the state so as to give the state university half a mill of the tax instead of .23 of a mill, as at present, was passed by the house yesterday by a vote of 63 to 37. All the negative votes without exception came from country members. On the basis of a state valuation of $1,000,000,000 the proposed rate will give the university an annual income from taxation of $500,000.

The house passed a bill which authorizes railroads and street railways to enter into "contracts for the carriage of passengers, express and freight" to "enable and permit the operation of railroads and streets railways in connection with each other."

A bill, permitting Sunday baseball between the hours of 1 and 6 p. m. was passed by the house.

The bill regulating co-operative and assessment casualty companies was passed by the house.

The house passed the bill limiting expenses paid in contests for seats in the legislature to $300. No expenses are to be paid the contestant if he fails in his contest.

To prevent the making of any future contracts with outside companies for the labor of the convicts at Stillwater, the house passed a bill prohibiting contract labor at the prison when the present contracts expire.

St. Paul, April 3.—The house yesterday passed the Cass Lake normal school bill, which passed the senate several days ago. This ends one of the most strenuously fought contests of many sessions. The bill secured just 60 votes, the exact number necessary for passage, while 52 voted against it and 7 were absent.

The house yesterday killed the bill which required slaughter houses when erected within five miles of the state university to be subject to the regulation of the state board of health. The bill was introduced after the house had killed the Rowe bill, which prohibited the erection of packing plants within five miles of the university. The public health committee yesterday reported the bill for indefinite postponement. A minority reported that the bill pass. On a motion to adopt the minority report there were 20 yeas and 76 nays.

The house yesterday passed a bill which makes it unlawful for any person to "kill or catch or have in her possession, living or dead, any wild bird, or purchase, offer or expose for sale, transport or ship any such wild bird after it has been killed or caught." The effect of this cannot be anything else than to prohibit a woman from wearing a bird on her hat and to prohibit milliners from selling them.

The house yesterday reconsidered the vote on the bill passed Thursday raising the university tax from .23 to .50 mill. Representative Stuart, in speaking for the motion, said that it had been called to his attention that many of the members had voted for the bill under a misapprehension. They were not aware that if the Dalzell taxation bill should fail of passage in the senate the board of equalization would assess property at its full value and it would give the university $1,000,000 with the half-mill levy. He did not believe that the university desired that much money for maintenance.

A bill to prohibit overcrowding of street cars was passed. It limits the straphangers to thirty-five for each car.

A bill creating a woman's department under the state labor bureau was passed.

St. Paul, April 5.—Under the eyes of a delegation of school teachers, who packed two galleries, the house Saturday passed the Sawyer bill authorizing the creation of teachers' retirement fund association in cities having a population of more than 50,000. The bill encountered considerable opposition, but was passed by a vote of 64 to 16. About twenty members were absent and about that many more who were present asked to be excused from voting.

The house adopted a resolution to send the game and fish committee on an inspecting tour of the state fish hatcheries April 9 and 10.

The bill making the terms of grain inspection board members three years was passed.

The Rosenwald bill requiring the gravity test for oil in addition to the flash test was passed.

St. Paul, April 6.—Senator Hackney's bill permitting the establishment of a correspondence course in farming in connection with the state university was passed in the senate yesterday. The bill was amended on general orders, cutting the appropriation from $75,000 to $50,000, and before passage it was further reduced to $30,000. One-third of this amount is to be distributed as prizes among the farmers for the best crops. The rest will start a bulletin service and a course of lectures in the country among the farmers upon topics closely related to their work.

The senate passed the bill increasing the amount farmers will get for condemned tubercular cattle. At present if a cow is killed as the result of the tuberculin test and found to be free from the disease the farmer recovers nothing. The law is to be changed so that if the animal is found to be healthy the farmer will be entitled to full compensation.

The senate took the first step toward protecting the Minnesota valley from floods yesterday by passing the bill for the dyking of Big Stone lake.

The anti-cigarette bill was reached in the senate yesterday, but action was deferred on account of light attendance.

In the House.

After a speech by Representative Wright of Minneapolis, in which he called Forestry Commissioner Andrews a pensioner who had never put out a fire and never will, the house yesterday killed the bill increasing the salary of the forestry commissioner from $1,500 to $2,000.

The house passed the bill doing away with the present contract system of buying books for the school libraries of the state. The bill allows the library boards to buy their library books wherever they please, and if they certify to the state superintendent that they have expended $20 or more in the purchase of books the state will refund $10.

Representative Wallace's bill exempting bonds issued by the state, counties, school districts and municipalities from taxation was passed.

The bill prohibiting unfair discrimination between communities by the larger lumber dealers was killed.

Two bills, one requiring domestic corporations and the other foreign corporations to make annual reports to the secretary of state, were passed.

St. Paul, April 7.—By a vote of 94 to 11, but after the fiercest fight of the session, the house yesterday passed the Campbell bill creating a commission to investigate the question of employers' liability and workingmen's compensation. There was considerable filibustering throughout the debate and numerous amendments were proposed, but all were voted out with one exception. The commission will be named by the governor.

The house passed Senator Works' bill authorizing cities to adopt a commission form of government. There was no opposition to the bill. Some slight amendments were made, which it is believed the senate will concur in.

The bill fixing a schedule of damages for injuries received by employes while at work was defeated yesterday by a vote of 30 to 76.

A bill prohibiting the marriage of first cousins was passed.

In the Senate.

The senate yesterday, by a vote of 39 to 16 passed the house bill prohibiting the sale, manufacture or giving away of cigarettes or cigarette materials. The bill will go into effect Aug. 1, 1909, unless vetoed by the governor. The vote on the bill followed a lively debate.

After reducing the amount of the appropriation for fighting forest fires the senate yesterday passed the Holmberg bill. As the bill came from the house it carried an appropriation of $28,000. This the senate cut to $14,000 after a little tilt on the floor. The bill enlarges the duties of the forestry commissioner and compels the burning of slashings in forests, so that they will not remain to feed later fires.

The senate passed the bill accepting 3,600 acres in Itasca State Park on condition that the donating lumber company be permitted to take off the timber and be relieved of taxation for ten years. The state will pay about $800 a year, so that the county will lose nothing.

The committee of the whole ordered a favorable report on the bill establishing a state text book commission.

Parisiennes Smiling School.

A school of smiles is the latest form of feminine commercial enterprise in Paris. The principal of the institution is a pretty and intelligent young Parisian woman, who herself possesses a most charming method of smiling, which she declares she can impart to her pupils in a course of twenty lessons.

Her prospectus sets forth that the art of smiling is an invaluable commercial asset and that it is equally essential to men who want to marry wealth. She recalls that a professional smile is utilized by every tradesman, from the butcher who supplies your meat to the druggist who provides your medicine. To be successful in business, she says, it is necessary to know how to smile pleasantly, even under the most annoying circumstances, and this accomplishment she is prepared to teach on very moderate terms.

To shop assistants of both sexes who are looking for an increase of salary she offers her services at reduced fees.

Stolen Money Found.

Piqua, Ohio, April 8.—Ten thousand dollars in bank notes, stolen from the National Bank of Reily, Ohio, Dec. 7, 1907, by yeggmen, was found yesterday on the farm of Fred Schneider, near New Palestine, Ind. Schneider found the package hidden in a thicket he was clearing away. The amount stolen was $12,700.

HOLDING OUT IN ONE

Golfer's Ambition—Club That Offers Reward for the Feat

The legitimate ambition of every golfer—short of winning the open championship—is to hole out in one, that is to drive the ball from the tee into the hole on the putting green in a single stroke.

Mr. Stuart Anderson, a prominent member of the Portrush Club, has achieved this distinction on no less than seven separate occasions—twice at North Berwick and twice at Aberdeen. A good many professionals, however, have holed out in one on two occasions, and an amateur, T. Ireland, has actually managed to do so twice in the same round.

By the way, it may not be generally known that under certain circumstances something more than mere honor and glory attaches to the accomplishment of this feat. Thus if it is achieved at what is known as the island hole of the Royal Ashdown Forest club during the progress of a quarterly competition the secretary is empowered to present the fortunate player with a £5 note. The fund for the purpose of meeting this demand upon the club's resources are obtained from an endowment presented by a wealthy member. So far, however, and despite keen struggle it entails, nobody has yet qualified for the award.

Luck, as will readily be understood, is a factor that enters very largely into golf. Perhaps the most notable case on record is that of Jamie Anderson when competing for the championship at Prestwick in 1878. He had just teed his ball for the seventeenth drive when a little girl standing among the spectators remarked that he had unconsciously placed it just in front of the proper line. Although nobody else had noticed the fact, this proved on examination by the referee to be correct.

Thereupon Anderson teed his ball again in a fresh position well behind the line and made a drive which landed him in the hole and eventually enabled him to win the match. If, however, he had played it from the original spot he would have been penalized a stroke and have lost the championship. Clearly then luck on the links is something to be taken into consideration whatever non-believers may say to the contrary.

Ring in Offertory.

After having taken the collection in the Cullompton parish church the church warden noticed a gentleman's gold ring in the offertory box.

At the conclusion of the service the vicar announced that a gold ring had been either accidentally dropped into the box or given as a thank offering, and would be restored to its owner if put in by mistake. No one claimed the ring

All Over the State

TO TRY CRANBERRY RAISING.

Minnesota Admirably Suited to Culture of Berry.

Cranberry raising will be one of the leading industries of Minnesota if the plans of one of the newest corporations do not miscarry.

The company in question is composed of Twin City business men, farmers from the northern part of the state and a number of scientists from the college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park. Dr. H. J. Franklin, assistant state entomologist, is one of the leading spirits in the undertaking, which represents practically the first attempt to cultivate cranberries on a large scale.

The undertaking is really the outcome of the efforts that Dr. Franklin has been making during the years that he has been connected with the state entomology department to interest the farmers in the northern part of the state in cranberry culture. At the annual meeting of the state horticultural society last December Dr. Franklin read a paper on the subject, and, coming as it did from one of the recognized authorities in the country on cranberry raising, created a sensation.

In the course of the paper he pointed out that Minnesota has nearly 6,000,000 acres of swamp land, which, although generally regarded as worse than useless is in reality admirably adapted for raising the pungent little berries that are in such demand with the housewife about Thanksgiving time.

Dr. Franklin told how Wisconsin, which has hardy a third the land available for this purpose that Minnesota has, has forged to the front as a cranberry producer, and even now the Badger State is giving Cape Cod and South New Jersey, the old standbys of the cranberry market, a hard run for top place on the list.

As a matter of fact the crop last year in Wisconsin was probably ahead of the combined crop in New Jersey and Massachusetts, where the continued drouth seriously curtailed the output. In the West the Wisconsin cranberry almost completely excluded the Eastern product, and hundreds of consumers for the first time in their lives probably had a chance to try the flavor of cranberry sauce made from what may be termed "native fruit."

Although the plans of the new cranberry company are still more or less in the tentative stage, it can be confidently stated that the concern will begin operations with a large tract of several hundred acres located in the vicinity of Mora. The tract is so situated that it can be flooded or drained at will, and the first season will probably be taken up with clearing off the underbrush, building the necessary dams and ditches and setting out the plants. Next season there will be a crop, and by the following year cranberry culture will be fully establishing as a paying industry.

It is announced that Dr. Franklin's company is not the only one that is being formed to undertake cranberry culture. Another coterie of prospective cranberry raisers still further up the state are about to embark in cranberry farming on a large scale, and are even now negotiating for the purchase of suitable tracts on the extreme northern edge of Pine county.

DISCUSS UNIVERSITY'S NEEDS.

Dr. Beard Tells of Work Outlined in School for Nurses.

Instead of the usual carefully prepared list of addresses on the same general topic, the speeches that followed the regular monthly dinner of the Faculty Club of the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis were extemporaneous and covered a wide range of subjects.

H. B. Mercer of the alumni spoke at some length of the need of some organization or person to look after the student body, and an address on "The Water Supply for Minneapolis," was given by Prof. John J. Flather of the civil engineering department. Dr. R. O. Beard, instructor in physiology in the medical school, gave a description of the work to be conducted in the new school for nurses to be opened in a few days and its prospects of development.

The proposed course in journalism that many of the students have tried to have included in the university curriculum was given another boost by Prof. John B. Johnston of the medical college, who made a strong plea for the instructors in the other colleges to co-operate with the faculty of the academic college in its efforts to secure a man to take charge of such a department. Dean John F. Downey also spoke along the same lines.

Prof. John H. Gray, head of the department of economics, as president of the club, acted as toastmaster.

PINE PRODUCTION IS 14,000,000.

Minnesota Also Cut 17,000,000 Feet of Hemlock in Year.

According to the report issued by the Northern Pine Manufacturers' association and the Northwestern Hemlock Manufacturers' association for the month of February, 34,474,181 feet of pine lumber was produced during the month in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan and Iowa. Of this amount 14,612,598 feet was produced in this state.

RED RIVER SOIL IS JUST RIGHT.

Best Seeding Conditions for Many Years in Southern End.

S. T. Dakin of Breckenridge, Minn., says that the Red river valley, particularly the southern part, had the best crop prospect in its history. This is because the soil is in perfect condition, more plowing has been done than ever before, and the drainage plan, upon which another $100,000 will be spent this year, had proved successful even beyond eexpectations.

In Wilkin county, Mr. Dakin said, the farmers have made greater progress with seeding than for many years, and there are some farmers with as much as 200 acres already in seed. Wheat has been put in largely, but there is the usual going over into things. The reduction proposed in the barley tariff in the Payne bill will not, Mr. Dakin thinks, affect the barley acreage this season. Should the bill pass and the reduction stand, there can be little doubt that barley will be less a favorite with the farmers, but there is nothing to show that the prospect of such reduction has had any effect so far. Red river valley farmers have found barley very profitable when they could get 50 cents for it at stations, as they have been able to do, and it is a favorite crop.

The Red river valley has had two or three wet seasons and the people living out of it have come to look for that to happen in the spring, Mr. Dakin said, but this year they are likely to be deceived. The land is drier than usual and the outlook for crop sowing very fine.

The immigration on to the farther west and to the Canadian west will be caught in part and stopped in the Red river valley in another season, Mr. Dakin says.

BUSY AT SOUTH ST. PAUL.

But Hogs Show Falling Off the Last Three Months.

The St. Paul Union Stock Yards company shows a large increase in receipts from Minnesota farmers during March. Its receipts suffered a loss, however, in Minnesota hogs.

There were killed over 30,000 cattle last month, of which over 21,000 were shipped from Minnesota points. It killed over 75,000 hogs, of which 60,690 were shipped from Minnesota points. It killed 7,600 calves, of which 6,555 were sent in from the fertile Minnesota prairies. Of sheep 20,000 were killed, of which 14,000 were brought up by the Minnesota farmer.

The receipts in hogs at the South St. Paul yards fell off about half the last three months from those of corresponding period last year. The total receipts for January, February and March, 1908, were 265,107 hogs; last year, 416,960.

Illinois has proved the best buyer. Chicago alone bought 2,935 butchered cattle last month. Illinois, outside of Chicago, bought 3,266; a total of 6,201 beeves. Chicago also bought 4,688 sheep, being fifteen times the largest purchaser of northern mutton. Iowa proved a large purchaser of beeves last month, buying 5,212 such of South St. Paul. Iowa led in purchases of calves, with 692 bodies. Iowa was the next largest purchaser of beeves, with 2,522, and Minnesota comes third, buying her own product to the extent of 1,968 beeves.

Twin City and Duluth butchers bought 1,049 beeves, 232 calves and 1,720 hogs (being by twenty times the largest purchaser of her own pork).

SALOON LICENSES COST $2,000.

The villages in the vicinity of Fergus Falls are going to secure just about as much revenue from liquor licenses, under the new law, which limits the number of saloons to one for each 500 inhabitants, as they did under former laws, which imposed no restrictions. The village of Brandon changed from dry to wet last election, and now comes under the provisions of the new law. A firm which has been operating two saloons in Evansville, which went dry, offers $2,000 for the right to run one saloon in Brandon, and the village council granted them a license for this sum. The same amount has been offered for the exclusive privilege of selling in New York Mills, and the council there is trying to decide which applicant to give the license to.

March Fire Loss Below Average.

During March there were forty-four fires in Minnesota, according to a report issued by Fire Warden Edward Peterson. The loss was $38,310 on buildings valued at $1,640,175. Contents were damaged to the extent of $66,918, which were valued at $1,943,690.

Four persons were arrested on charges of arson, one in Duluth and three at Ranier, Koochiching county. The loss and number of fires are both below the general average.

SAYS OLD EGGS ARE GOOD.

"U" Professor Gives Economics Students Hints for Buying.

Prof. John L. Coulter of the economics department of the state university gave his class a lesson in egg buying, incidentally upsetting a time-honored theory of the housewife. Prof. Coulter declared that cold-storage eggs are much better than the so-called fresh variety and that people make a mistake in demanding fresh eggs of their grocers.

Rainy Day in Dixie.

Last Sunday was cold and rainy, making it one of the most disagreeable days that we have had here this winter. Being barelegged and having a hole in the bottom of our shoe rendered us unable to get out, and we could do nothing but sit by the fire, bake our shins and whistle "Dixie" with all the variations.—Georgia Nugget.

A PROVOKED ASSAULT

By CLARENCE LOUIS CULLEN.

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

When Dipper the Blink, the renowned sandwich man, got his recent semi-annual three-months' stretch at the hands of the yawning magistrate, the public press either carelessly or maliciously misrepresented the case. The public press dismissed the matter with the unsatisfying statement that Dipper the Blink had got his customary three months on the preceding day for committing an unjustifiable assault upon an inoffensive citizen. But there are always two or more sides to the stories that the newspapers handle in such off-hand fashion; and it shall be left to the reader of this story to make up his unbiased mind as to whether Dipper the Blink's assault was unjustifiable or whether the victim of the assault was inoffensive.

On Tuesday afternoon last Dipper the Blink—but there may be a reader here and there who, never having seen or heard of the renowned sandwich man, will fail to immediately grasp the significance of Dipper the Blink's name. The Dipper end of it, then, was tacked on to the sandwich man on account of his well-known preference for that brand of stimulant which is composed of cochineal, sweet chewing tobacco, and raw alcohol, which is dished out at the barrel houses in sizable tin dippers, and which is invitingly and alluringly advertised by means of signs nailed to the fronts of the barrel houses that read something like this:

"A Large Tin Full of Fine, Mellow Old Kentucky Bourbon Whiskey for Three Cents. Get next!"

As to the Blink, the sandwich man achieved that end of his title in his early youth by reason of the fact that one of his orbs absented itself at that time—that he had a bum lamp, in brief.

On Tuesday afternoon last, then, Dipper the Blink was gloomily patrolling his district, concealed up to the neck on both sides by vari-hued signs.

"Hang Youse!"

The signs announced, with many emphasizing exclamation points, that Dipper the Blink's employer, the head-to-foot dealer in second-hand clothing, was the cheapest man on earth. In addition, Dipper the Blink's employer announced on the signs that he was organizing a Society for the Encouragement of Wearing Clean Shirts, and that he had the shirts in stock, from 12 cents up. The bottom line of the signs read, "We Need the Money!"

As he plodded along, getting the elbow from everybody on the sidewalks and silently enduring the derisive shouts of truck-drivers and small boys, Dipper the Blink couldn't help but apply that bottom phrase on his signs to his own case.

"I need de dough meself de woist ever," he muttered, reflecting dismally upon the fact that he had only had six of the large tins full of his favorite mixture since beginning his daily patrol at seven o'clock that morning. "An' de stift dat I'm workin' f'r toins me down on me nine-cent touch—wot d'youse t'ink o' dat? Wouldn't pass me de nine—wouldn't dat make youse need medicine? An' I need 'bout t'ree in a row right now. Feelin' like a nickel's wort' o' lard in a paper sack—an' nix de price. I'm up agin de real t'ing now, right. I need one, annyhow, so bad dat I got de tizzy-wizzy, an——"

Here Dipper the Blink broke off suddenly, executed a sudden leap through the air, brought his much broken right brogan down on a piece of paper that had caught his eye while he was in the midst of his soliloquy, and then looked as indifferent as he could in his excitement, so as not to attract the attention of passers-by.

"It may be a phony at dat," he mused, before removing his foot from the piece of paper and stooping to pick it up. "Maybe it's a piece o' dat stoige money, or a rain-check, or somet'in' else dat ain't on de level."

He glanced furtively all around him, and then quickly stooped and picked up the piece of paper. It was all right—a neat and comparatively new example of the twenty-dollar gold certificate. Dipper the Blink had to lean against an awning-pole.

"What, me wolk!" he suddenly thought, coming to after a trance that lasted fully five minutes. "Me wolk, wit' a double sawbuck in me pajamas? Fergit it!"

Whereupon he repaired, as fast as he could shuffle with his fore-and-aft burden of signs, to his favorite liquid refectory, which was a very malodorous cellar, lighted by three precarious looking kerosene lamps scattered around on the tops of the barrels that leaned against the moist, clammy walls. Seven or eight more or less visible pals of Dipper the Blink's sat up—they had been reclining on the sawdust-littered floor—and regarded the sandwich man curiously when he swung in, his signs a-clattering. Obviously the Blink had nailed the price.

For answer Dipper the Blink threw off his sign-sandwich, kicked the same full of holes—to the intense astonishment of his pals and the bull-necked giant who presided over the barrel-spigots—and airily cast his twenty-dollar gold certificate at his feet—being careful, however, to keep his right foot elevated so that he could step on the bill in case of necessity.

"All han's!" said Dupper the Blink, huskily. "I'm it. What, me wolk wit' dat?" casting an affectionate look at the piece of currency reposing on the sawdust. "Hey, Butch," condescendingly addressing the low-browed barrel-house proprietor, who grinned amiably, if horrifically, behind the barrels, "push 'em out f'r de bunch, an' keep on a-pushin' 'em till I flags youse. De're all on me, tsee?"

The castaways gathered around Dipper the Blink, knocked their filled pannikins against his musically, and drank to his eternal damnation with the best spirit in the world, at the same time patting him upon the back and telling him that he would "do," that he belonged to "de stake class," that "he knowed ho t' go de distance," and that they always "had him piped f'r one o' de big winners." Within something less than 20 minutes the Blink was telling them the story of his life with whistled variation; within an hour he was radiantly, blissfully unconscious.

When he came to he was being swiftly, but not gently, pushed up the cellar stairs. A powerful knee was in the small of his back, and two brawny hands were at his coat collar. The Blink was stretched out in the middle of the cobbled street before he was able to achieve any continuity of thought. Then it all came back to him. He hastily searched his pockets. They were all empty.

"Touched," he mused miserably, "an after de way I blowed de bunch—touched!" He picked himself up and started down the cellar stairs. Fearful of flying bungstarters, he did not go in, but paused at the threshold.

"Hey, Butch," he said plaintively to the proprietor, whom he could not see, "w'ere's me cash? Gimme wot's lef o' me tweny an' I'll—"

"G'wan, ye mutt!" came the harsh tones of the barrel-house boss, "Tweny me eye! Youse guzzled dat all up wit' de gang las' night. Nottin' doin'. Went away quick, now, or I'll come out dere an' bite off wan o' youse's fine."

"Hey, Butch," mournfully inquired the Blink, after a pause, "don't I git a couple o' chasers t' clear me lid out o' dat wad I blowed in?" He knew that he had been robbed, but he didn't dare complain.

"Git nottin'!" savagely replied the barrel-house Boniface. "Youse'll git some dents in youse's shins if youse don't went away right sudden. Git de price an' youse'll git de booze. Nix de price, nix de booze. Dat's me. Drill out, now!"

Dipper the Blink sadly climbed the cellar stairs. His head was bursting. His tongue rattled around in his mouth like the clapper of a bell. But he was sorer mentally than he was physically.

"Me wit' tweny on'y yistiddy aft'noon," he murmured, as he trudged along, "an' dem porch-climbers gits it all! An, after de way I blowed 'em! An' de skate wouldn't ban' me out wan or two t' fix me out, hey?"

It was about seven o'clock, and the morning was fine and clear. The Blink plodded along, with his hands in his pockets and his shoulders hunched forward, and wrath in his soul.

As he passed a cheap little barber shop, a spry, middle-aged marketman whom the Blink had often observed presiding over his stand, emerged, whistling. The Blink stopped and looked the marketman over. The marketman looked fresh and rosy. It was obvious that the marketman had had his breakfast, and that he had also had a good night's sleep. Revolt and resentment swept the Blink all of a sudden. The thought of the way he had been imposed upon in the matter of that twenty, the spry, cheerful appearance of the marketman, and the barber's powder on the marketman's round cheeks—

"Hang youse!" exclaimed Dipper the Blink, suddenly shooting out his right fist and catching the marketman with a blow on the chin that felled him like a log—"hang youse, youse is always gittin' shaved!"

Eight minutes later Dipper the Blink was lying at full length in the bottom of the hurry wagon, with two huge cops sitting on his chest.

It is for the discerning reader to judge whether the Blink's assault was "unjustifiable," as the calumnious police court reporters expressed the matter in the careless public press.

RETAIN LONGING FOR ROMANCE.

Frequent Cause of Tragedy in the Life of a Woman.

It is because women are always striving to keep love at some emotional height, while men, after a few years of marriage, are quite content to let romance die out and settle down to a placid, comfortable, humdrum existence, writes Mildred Herbert Urner in the Red Book.

How often does one see a woman past her first youth, and yet with her insatiable longing for romance still strong within her, striving with all her arts and wiles to make of her stolid, prosaic, middle-aged husband an ardent, romantic lover. Usually the man is blandly unconscious of her efforts; or at most mildly wonders why Mary after all these years, could not take his love for granted and not insist on being constantly told of it.

And there lies the tragedy of most women's lives. They want to be told—constantly, repeatedly told that they are loved. They can never be reconciled to taking it for granted. However faithful and devoted they may know their husbands are at heart, they want it in words. They want, through all their married life, all the little love phrases and tender attentions of their honeymoons. And not one woman in ten thousand gets them! Yet with what pitiful persistency they keep on wanting!

HIS DENTAL REVENGE

By E. DeLANCEY PIERSON.

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

"I do git so out of patience," grumbled Major Snapper from his corner in the cafe of The Hasbeen club, "when I reads in the paper of a man makin' a gunplay 'cause his wife in one o' them absent-minded fits that takes women at times, runs off with another feller. Now some of these fieldmales hain't allers ter blame. Durin' pioneer days in the west, fur instance, fambly relations got so mixed up, an' husban's and wives so scattered, that like enough when some hefty-handed female sot up a claim to a man he'd be'n a horn toad an' no gent ef he had denied the application. Then a'ter a time, when she's had a chancet to cool off and wa'n'a so het up with enthusiasm, she mought come to the conclusion that the gent she'd fixed on was the same she'd merried 'fore the war.

"Then mebbe about this time 'long would lope another man who, she was sartain, held the original copyright on her. Ef he was willin', why, off they'd callyhoot together. A most commendable move, I should say, on her part, for havin' made a mistake she done what she could to squar things."

Something like a groan of disapproval echoed through the room at this juncture, as if the audience were not wholly in sympathy with this explanation of a recreant wife's behavior.

"Oh, but I don't mean to say," Major Snapper hastened to add, "that all such maternomial problems is solved in sich a mawral manner, so ter speak. But I never could see the sense of a gent tryin' to win his wife back by shootin' the other feller. He's likely to git put where he won't be able to enj'y her sassiety for a long spell to come, or go wher' ther' hain't no marryin' nor givin' in merri'ge.

"Now we used to take things more philosophic-like in the days when I was livin' to Crooked Elbow, Idyho.

"They was a party there by name of Bootcapper, a chemist an' scientific sharp that done the assayin' an' fixed up the explosives for the mine blasts

"Filled Ev'ry One on 'Em with a' Explosive."

—as smart a mushrat as ye ever seen, and so ockerpied in his work that he had no time to spend with his young wife. She was one of them high-steppin' short-horns with eyes that would burn a hole in a blanket.

"A young prospector, Frisby by name, come crawfishin' 'round the camp, one of them soft-shells that needs ter git stepped on a few times to smooth the kinks outen him. But he must ha' be'n deep, an' 'fore long they was consid'able eye play and the like 'twixt him and the chemist's wife. Then in a short time they was both missin'; went off as ca'am as ye please in a stage.

"Now, Bootcapper, when he learns the fac's, didn't go 'round wavin' a gun, an' r'arin' on his hind legs like a wild mustang. Nossir. He didn't even try to round up the pelicans as he mought ha' done, an' for all I knows he didn't miss a' hour's sleep or a squar' meal. He seen his duty in his work, and he done it, as long as his contrac' at the mines had to run.

"Some year a'ter that he slung his job an' moved to Devil's Lake, whar' he studied dentistry, an' when the doctor crossed the Divide he carried on business under the old man's name.

"One day when he was sharpenin' the weapons of his murderous perfession the door opens and a gent slips in that he recognizes to oncst as that terantular Frisby that years before had run off with his wife. Did he perceed to bore the newcomer full o' holes or pitch him th'ough the winder? Nossir! He see the young houn' don't recognize him, and he received him as j'yous as a Digger Injun would a bottle o' tanglefoot.

"'I hev severial tooths,' sez Frisby, 'half a dozen, mebbe, and I want the lowest possible rates for fillin' the job in the shortest time.'

"He was a savin' man, was Frisby, even when it came to pickin' up a fambly.

"Bootcapper looks him over inside and out, keerless like, and apperiently doin' a pile o' thinking as he examined the patient's ivory fence.

"'I don't care what ye fill 'em with,' chirps up Frisby, 'so it's cheap an' lastin'.'

"When he heer'd Bootcapper's bid for the molar masonry he was delighted. It come cheap. So he stretched out in the cheer, an' the dentist give him some sleepy stuff so's he wouldn't feel the jolts and the grindin' of the drills, augurs, an' picks in his midst.

"Bootcapper he settled down to work for a' hour, for it wa'n't no easy job to fill up the holes in sich a tusker.

"'Now,' s'he, 'you got a line o' fortifications in yer jors that's cal'lated to destroy any amernition you've a mind to th'ow inter 'em,' s'he.

"Frisby he runs to the glass and grins admirin'ly at his reflection an' them remodeled molars, a-thinkin' all the time what a fine bargain he'd made. But his j'y didn't last long. He see another grinnin' face in the glass and turned white's a biled inion. It was Bootcapper lookin' over his shoulder, and it come over him all to oncst that he stud in the presence of the man he had wronged.

"'We—we have met afore,' he stammers out with a bleat like a mounting goat.

"'Why, yas,' sez the dentist, bland like, 'I guess I'm a so'ter relation of yourn by merri'ge. Kinder half-brother-in-law or suthin' that-a-way,' an' ag'in he give that heejious smile. 'But don't let yer teeth chatter, my frien', it's dangerous. Ye see, I filled them tooths at bargain rates, and you said you didn't care what went into 'em so long as it was cheap an' lastin'. Well,'—in a holler voice—'I done it. I filled ev'ry one on 'em with a' explosive that'd make dynermite seem like a seidlitz powder, an' ef ye bring yer jaws together sharp yer like to blow yer blamed head off!'"

The major paused impressively and blew his nose loudly.

"'Yas,' continued Bootcapper, 'ef ye want ter save yer r'uf I advise ye to stick to spoon vit'als for the rest of yer mortal career. Sally Bell (that was the name of his late wife) was allus a hefty hand at parridge and stirabout,' and with that he guides his paralyzed patient outen the office, tellin' him to mind the step and not close his face of a sudden or they'd be a' egsplosion."

The major paused again and took a mighty gulp from the glass at his elbow.

"Sich, my frien's, was the orful revenge that Bootcapper worked on the party that blowed the light out on his fambly altar. Some'rs in this broad land the victim Frisby is ekin' out the miser'ble remains of a wasted life, sustained by suckin' breakfast food through a quill."

A shuddering sigh came from the auditors.

"I know it, fer I seen him. An' ter think that a'ter all it was on'y a leetle joke of Bootcapper's 'bout the egsplosives, done fer revenge. A joke, though, that the onfort'nate Frisby has never saw the p'int of, and to my notion, never will."

SWEET CHARITY IN PARIS.

Altogether Too Much of It Would Seem to Begin at Home.

Charity must be in a bad way in Paris, if we accept the statement of a correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle. Here is what he writes:

"This is the result of the entertainment given at the Grand Opera for the benefit of the Sicilians: Out of $20,000 made, $16,000 was deducted for expenses. A fete was given not long ago which was well attended. Every benefit in aid of victims is always well attended, and this one made a profit of 20 per cent., out of which 15 per cent. was taken for expenses. You know that a lawsuit was brought against a commission which had orders to take money to the victims of the eruption of Mount Pelee in Martinique. It was found that not 5 cents on the dollar was given to the victims. When there are such catastrophies it would be well to send for a Diogenes with his lantern to seek out and find an honest man in whose care one could place the money so generously given. Just think of all the mites of the widows included in those millions! They would have accomplished something better had the widows kept them for their own needs."

LAST OF THE MEDICINE MEN.

Hut-cho-nu-pah Had Long Been a Power Among the Indians.

Hut-cho-nu-pah, last of the medicine men, died last month in the Snake hills of the Creek nation. He was 95 years old. For half a century he had been one of the most turbulent spirits in Oklahoma.

Hut-cho-nu-pah led the last rebellion of the Creeks in 1890. His faction was subdued by the Creeks themselves before the United States troops got there. In a battle Hut-cho-nu-pah's band was annihilated and he was condemned to death.

But so great was the awe in which the old medicine man was held that no one could be found to be his executioner. With his adherents dead and himself imprisoned, his influence was so potent that he compelled the election of a friend as chief and was pardoned.

The medicine man fought for the northern forces during the civil war. He always asserted that he was under the special protection of the Supreme Being.—Indian's Friend.

Laments Football Energy.

I see that the number of athletes failing to pass a university examination is less than it was. The shade of Ezra Cornell will rejoice. What our founder wanted was not show of muscle, but preparation for life, in which, in the case of university men, muscle does not count for much. The force spent in football cannot be recalled for study. Let us have games, by all means, but games which exercise, not exhaust, and in which all alike can take part.

"Besides, there is military drill, good in itself, and not to be neglected if the force of the country is to be kept in the right hands. Into some universities the betting ring seems to have crept; never, I hope, into ours."—Goldwin Smith, in Cornell Era.

Women Holding Office in Ireland.

The suffrage papers of England report that the number of women elected to office in Ireland during the last 12 months has been gratifying to all advocates of equal suffrage. Five women—Mrs. L. A. Barr, Mrs. Griffin, Miss Hamilton, Miss G. Leake Griffin and Lady Dockrell—were elected as urban, district and town councilors. Forty-three women were elected as rural district councilors, 20 of them for the first time. As poor law guardians, 103 women were elected.

A PREMATURE WEDDING-TRIP

By S. LORING JACKSON.

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

He had long dreaded the ordeal, and groaned because one could not be married without going through the ceremony. He had begged for a quiet home wedding—heaven knew that would be trying enough!—but his prospective father-in-law was all bristles at the mention of such a thing.

"What! one of my daughters stand up in the parlor at home to be married, like a coster-monger's!" he cried indignantly.

There was money enough on both sides to warrant a display, and a display was to be made—such a display as sent the cold chills down his spine to think of, remembering that he was to be one of the chief objects of it.

He would have given thousands to have been able to steal Lorella, be married at a squire's office, and take her away on his yacht till the world had forgotten them.

But Lorella was painfully indifferent to his timidity, and enjoyed in prospect the parade and publicity incident to a fashionable church wedding, with a fashionable breakfast following it, and a fashionable departure on an outbound crowded liner following that.

"To be stared at by thousands!—to be criticised—the way one walked, and stood, and answered—every wink, even, noted!" He pulled the bedclothes over his head, as if to hide from the curious, hawk-eyed throng he would have to face on the morrow. He knew his kind.

His nervous anticipation kept him awake until near morning; then he dropped into a heavy sleep, from which he suddenly roused with a shock that landed him on the floor. It was late—hirribly late!—and there was no one to help him. His valet had taken this, of all times, to get himself banged up and bundled off to a hospital.

He dashed through his bath, into his clothes, and away to the barber to be groomed, fuming at his own idiocy in obstinately refusing the offered services of his best man.

"The Wedding Can Proceed Without His Presence."

Where was that new suit—his wedding togs! He had carefully spread each article separately in a different place the night before to have all straight and no confusion, and now!—he rushed about, picking up and flinging down, wasting precious minutes, his eyes running to the clock every second.

While his shaking fingers fumbled with his tie the man announced the automobile waiting, and was told savagely to let it wait and be blanked!

"Am I to run her for you, sir?" he asked respectfully.

"No, confound you! you're to go to thunder!—and have her up to all she can do! D'ye hear?" he shouted.

It was a relief to boil over on some one, and the man's wide, knowing grin was exasperating.

"I'll barely get there in time to head the procession, even if she does her best!" he stormed, looking himself over, in the mirror and out, to be sure he was dressed, had his handkerchief, gloves, new hat——. "Confound the wedding!—confound everything!"—He had on the wrong shoes, and had picked up his old hat!

But at last he was ready, seated, and off, conscious that behind every blind of every window of the great apartment building eyes were peering out at him, in gloating amusement at his undignified and hasty departure.

It was a journey of miles across the great city, but she "was up to her best," and the swift, smooth motion soothed and quieted him somewhat. He would not be very late; the accident to his valet was excuse enough, at any rate. He hadn't done so badly, after all, to get himself up in this style with no help—and here he was, on the home stretch, as he might say; only a few more blocks, that floated behind him like a flowing river of cloud, and he had arrived.

He meant to stop with a sweeping curve, but instead shot by with undiminished speed and a string of exclamations, conscious of more eyes—friendly and expectant spectators—agape with surprise. He was paralyzed, stupefied with shame at this exhibition of himself. The sweat of mortification dampened his brow, and he was tempted to ride on and on, anywhere out of this ridiculous position. But by an effort he braced himself, turned and again bore down upon the house, where he was awaited with impatience, if not with anxiety. With all his might he strove to pull up. Useless! She had taken the bits in her teeth and plunged on in spite of him.

As he dashed by he glanced up. Papa-in-law was scowling from the library window, the footman was hastening down the steps to assist him to alight; from the upper windows he had a fleeting vision of snowy forms and astonished incredulous eyes. He lifted his hat, bowed gracefully and again vanished. The he remembered that instead of tipping his hat, as any acquaintance would casually, he should have made signals of distress to apprise them of his predicament.

"Though they cannot be so blanked dull as to suppose that it is for the fun of it that I go sailing up and down the street like a confounded, three-cornered Chinese flying-machine!" he exclaimed, feeling that they were somehow answerable for the erratic movements of his steed.

With a stern face he made a long run to "take the tantrums out of her," but she still refused to obey. He leaned back in a cold despair, ready for anything.

The imposing mansion was in commotion—cabs, conveyances arriving. They made way for him in haste—agitation, impatience, anger in the very air. From the open hall his best man beckoned wildly as he swept past, as if he could if he would!

Uncontrollable mirth seized him. "Here I go up, up, uppy! Here I come down, down, downy! Ta-ta, old man," he sung out, "see you later! I'm out for a ride—my wedding trip! Here's display—for you! See-saw! Ha! ha!" he laughed in nervous hilarity till the tears ran down his cheeks.

The laugh trailed back to incensed, indignant ears.

"The infernal puppy!" papa raged in the privacy of the bride's boudoir, whence, surrounded by her maidens, she had viewed the oscillations of the groom with amazement. "This is his revenge for having to give in to a decent wedding! 'Didn't like display!—wanted something quiet and private.' Looks like it, parading himself like a monkey on a hand organ!"

"B-u—but, pa-pa, mayb-e the m-m-ma-chine won't stop!" sobbed the bride.

"Won't fiddlesticks! As if such a thing could happen to him! It's his boast that he knows it and can manage it better than the man that made it!—No! it's his impudence! and he'll rue it! The wedding can proceed without his presence. Let him spread himself all over town if he pleases! I've never been satisfied with him. I—"

"Oh, papa!" and "James, what can you mean!" bride and mother cried in a breath.

"I mean the wedding shall go on—that Hendeson Field shall take his place! I'll phone for him this minute!—no, I won't hear a word!" He threw out his hands, waving them off. "I've always preferred Henderson to that imbecile! The unmitigated ass!—the—"

"Yes, sir! the unmitigated ass! that would like to whip another unmitigated ass this minute!" and the panting, perspiring groom, who had burst in, shook his fist at the world in general and papa-in-law in particular.

"Sir, I demand—"

"Come, come!" the best man interfered pleasantly, strangling a laugh, "it's only a half hour past time. Do the crowd at the church good to wait a little. All's well that ends well."

Mamma, maidens and best man set to work oiling the troubled waters, smoothing ruffled plumage, and in due time the finale was reached with all the pomp and ceremony demanded by the strictest devotee of fashion,—but not without an occasional stifled giggle from some hysterically inclined guest.

LITTLE DEMAND FOR SERVICES.

Business of Ghost Eradicator Not in Very Flourishing Condition.

These are the days of the specialist in all things and it is not surprising to read of a gentleman who describes himself as "The Original Haunted House Restorer and Ghost Eradicator." Nor is it astonishing to find that he complains of slackness of trade. A ghost, if it be a well authenticated and respectable ghost, represents an asset and these are days when property owners do not willingly sacrifice assets. Moreover, a well established family ghost with a history of generations has a title to regard himself as a vested interest and entitled to all compensation for disturbance, says the Westminster (Eng.) Gazette. If there were any real prosperity in this trade of ghost banisher we should have to counteract its destructive power by a great league and covenant of all the printers of Christmas stories, of the amateurs of the occult and the scientific searchers after a spirit world. For all these the ghost is an essential to continued existence. Banish the spook and their occupation would be gone, and John Burns would be invaded by an army of psychical researchers out of work and demanding special treatment in the forthcoming legislation of the government.

Absolute Lapse of Memory.

The case of Florin G. Lee, a student of electrical engineering at Riverside, who is now lodged in the Los Angeles city jail charged with nothing more serious than an absolute lapse of memory, presents many remarkable features. Lee, who was employed as a bookkeeper at Riverside, suddenly disappeared from the home of his parents there several weeks ago, and since then a continuous quest has been kept up for him. Deserts have been searched, rivers patrolled and the police of all western cities notified of his description. The other day a young woman who knew Lee in Riverside recognized him on the streets of Los Angeles. Lee did not know her and denied that his name was Lee. He denied any knowledge of such a person or such a place as Riverside. The woman called the police and Lee was taken to the station and later to the hospital. Relatives of the young man have arrived and fully identified him, but he does not know them. He says he recollects nothing further back than a few weeks ago, when he recalls seeing a bright flash of light, then a train ride and his arrival in Los Angeles.

Golf and the Amateur.

The abolition of the amateur definition would not alter anything that is of any value to golf. It need not even mean the abolition of the amateur championship if clubs simply excluded from their membership those who were or had been professional players, and it would certainly clear the game of many injustices, abuses and misconceptions to which the definition gives rise.—Chambers' Journal.

ARE BUT A MEMORY

FOUR CAPTAINS WHO FOUGHT WITH DEWEY ARE DEAD.

Half of the Commanders Who Wrote Their Names on the Pages of History May 1, 1898, Have Passed Away.

Of the eight battle captains who sailed with Dewey into Manila bay May 1, 1908, four are but memories in the hearts of the American people, for with the death December 5, of "Hoch der Kaiser" Coghlan, the fourth of this little galaxy of naval stars was piped to quarters. Not even one of the surviving captains is in active service to-day, for all, with the ranks of rear admirals, have been retired, and are living in different parts of the country. One, now Rear Admiral Lamberton, makes his home in Washington.

Once a year the Dewey captains gather at dinner, when the old battle is refought and the old memories retold. But a few months ago, on the anniversary of that May morning's battle, five of them dined together. Now, before the year has passed, Admiral Coghlan has gone, and next May but four of the grizzled sea dogs will join hands and hearts over the board.

Then what of the men who by death of Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan have been brought again into the public eye? The eight captains who answered along the line the signals which to Capt. Gridley read: "Fire when you are ready," and hurled their ships through the network of mines which lined the harbor and against the belching of the guns of Cavite wrote a hitherto untouched page in the history of naval warfare. The aggrate tonnage of the Dewey squadron, some 19,061 tons, was less than the single tonnage of that ship, the first of the new type of American Dreadnought launched recently, the North Dakota.

Capts. Gridley, Coghlan, Wild and Wood are dead, and those who still live prove no less the quality of the stuff of which the battle captains were made, and their little alcove in the hall of naval history is unique and unlike all others.

Capt. Gridley presents the characteristic example of the sterner stuff of which these men were made. When the Spanish squadron was sighted that morning and the orders to "go ahead" were given Capt. Gridley was ill in his stateroom. The admiral had selected the Olympia, Gridley's ship, as the flagship, and the captain unflinchingly ascended to his post of duty, still racked by the pains and agues of Asiatic fever. The order came to fire, and Gridley stuck to his post, fighting his ship with admirable clear-headedness until the white flag appeared on the Spanish forts and naught else remained of the Spanish squadron but the masts and towers protruding above the blue of the Asiatic bay. The battle being over, Gridley collapsed, to be invalided to a naval hospital, where death followed shortly.

Dewey's fleet was officered by the following: Olympia (flagship), second-class cruiser, 5,865 tons, Capt. Charles V. Gridley (dead); Baltimore, second-class cruiser, 4,413 tons, Capt. Nemias M. Dyer; Raleigh, third-class cruiser, 3,183 tons, Capt. Joseph B. Coghlan (dead); Boston, third-class cruiser, 3,000 tons, Capt. Frank Wild (dead); Concord, gunboat, 1,710 tons, Capt. Asa Walker; Petrel, gunboat, 890 tons, Commander E. P. Wood (dead), and the dispatch boat McCulloch, revenue cutter service, Capt. D. B. Hodgsdon. The eighth of the battle captains was Benjamin P. Lamberton; then a captain who, while not in command of a vessel during the battle, took an exceedingly prominent part as Admiral Dewey's chief of staff.

White House Dances to Continue.

When the merits of the Roosevelt administration are taken stock of from a social viewpoint two ideas come forward, horses and dancing. No executive in recent times has given an impetus to the horse as the present. No one has ever been so identified with dancing as Mrs. Roosevelt. At the dances which have been given every alternate Friday, Mrs. Roosevelt has appeared on the floor as often as her daughter. The president has shown that he can be as strenuous on the carpet as elsewhere. Dancing having been established, it will no doubt be continued throughout the next administration. The president-elect is as light on his feet as a girl of 16 and Mrs. Taft just dotes on dancing. The Clevelands never gave a dance and the Harrisons only one. The new order is entirely satisfactory if it becomes part of White House tradition.—New York Press.

Origin of Julienne Soup.

In hotels and restaurants we invariably find "Julienne" soup and "Julienne" potatoes, both of which are universal favorites. Nearly 70 years ago in Boston a Frenchman by the name of Julien kept a famous eating place on Milk street, almost opposite the door of Old South church. Here the elite of the city used to gather; in fact, it was Boston's Delmonico. A modern iron front building has replaced the quaint gabled structure and few remember the one-time popular rendezvous. Julien invented the soup which was called for him and, I suppose, the potatoes, although it was the soup that made him famous. He is buried in the old graveyard on the Common, forgotten, perhaps, but it is interesting to know that his name survives on nearly every dinner table in the land.

Leak in Gas Pipe.

"I cannot understand how you escaped blowing yourself up," said the older housekeeper to the young one, as she rushed out to learn the cause of a somewhat sharp explosion. "Don't you know better than to hunt for a leak in a gas pipe with a lighted match?

"Let me tell you a secret my grandmother taught me years ago. Paint the pipe with a thick soapsuds, and where there is a leak the escape of gas will blow up soap bubbles about the crack.

"Quite simple, isn't it, but it will save you a bad start to your nerves if not explosions that are dangerous."

The government is prosecuting the Standard Oil company again. What's the use?

It is very doubtful if a tonnage tax bill will be passed at this session of the legislature.

New York will soon exceed London in population. The latest count gives the American city 4,422,685.

The National exchequer shows that it costs a lot of money to run the country according to the Roosevelt specifications.

Williamm J. Bryan paid $2,875 for a moter car last week. He probably thinks he can afford it since he no longer has a son-in-law.

A straw vote in an eastern magazine showed 120 votes for the retention of Cannon as speaker of the house, and 2,300 against the proposition. However, Uncle Joe didn't consider himself bound by the result.

The Fairmont Sentinel was asked by a curious subscriber to name the 'sister states,' and these were given: Miss Ouri, Misses Sippi, Ida Ho, Mary Land, Callie Fornia, Ala Bama, Della Ware, Louisa Anna and Minnie Sota.

There is still a prospect of a redistricting bill passing the legislature. The new plan would add about ten new house members, two of them going to this district. Under the proposed bill Norman, Red Lake and Beltrami would each be given a house member, and one would be assigned to Mahnomen and Clearwater.

The Ada Herald proposes Sentaor Hanson for Congress. This arrangement would tickle Red Lake Falls 'most to death, athough the proposition comes a little late in the day, as we are virtually pledged to Dan O'Niell for the job. Perhaps, though, Dan would take Senator Clapp's job, which would give us the long-hoped-for opportunity of doing something for both of these deserving partiots.

Dr. George B. Frankforter, a professor of science at the State University, announces that he has after twelve years of work discovered a process whereby paper pulp can be manufactured from fir trees or even saw dust. At present spruce is the only wood that can be used for this purpose, and inasmuch as the spruce supply is limited, this discovery is timely. C. A. Smitn, the big Minneapoils lumberman, has become interested in the matter and he will erect a plant for manufacturing pulp by this new process.

Ex-Congressman Bede makes the following significant comment in the April issue of Bede's Budget:

"Six months ago Uncle Joe Cannon had hoofs and horns, was the arch enemy of the nation, and was denounced from the stump in most vehement terms and the most burning language. But those who denounced him most severely have since gone to Washington and voted to continue this fiend incarnate of campaign days as speaker of congress. Did they lie last fall, or have they sold out now? Perchance the campaign contributor has pulled the string. Let the voice of the people be heard."

Governor Johnson's veto of the Cass Lake normal bill is very generally commended. Aside from the question as to whether northern Minnesota needs another school at present, it is agreed save by those directly interesed that Cass Lake is not the proper place for it. It is by no means the center of the population to be served, and the environment is far from wholesome. In two or four years the normal school question can be taken up more intelligently, and by that time the "log-rolling" influences which passed the Cass Lake bill will probably be removed.

The Payne tariff bill will be especially disappointing to Minnesota. Few articles are put on the free list, and in most instances the duty is left so high that there will be little importation and no increased revenue. So long as Cannon and Aldrich and the other corporate agents control congress there will be no relief. The tariff is no longer a party question, as evidenced by the fact that at least fifteen democrats went back on their party platform and joined the corporation crowd to help re-elect Cannon and pass the infamous rules by which the house is bound hand and foot to the speaker's authority. In the next congressional election it will be up to the people to break away from party idolatry and support men they know to be honest in their desire to revise the tairff in the interest of the people.

Wheelock's Weekly: If Caruso's voice has really deserted him he might stand in front of his phonogoaph records and just make his mouth go.

Cannon Falls Beacon: A bill has been introduced in the legislature providing for a classification of windmills. Is this a move for self protection by our law making body?

Starbuck Times: "Will the republic endure?" inquires Thomas W. Lawson, The fact that it has endured Mr. Lawson so long ought to be proof positive of its abundant ability to stand anything.

St. Cloud Times: Roscoe B. Gigbee of St. Paul, enthusiastic director of the late lamented Hearst Independence league in the last Minnesota political campaign, has quit the Hearst party. Emphatically, he is done with Hearst and all his works and workers.

Little Falls Transcript: It looks as if the farmers of Morrison county who want prison-made binder twine and have not yet ordered their supply had better begin to wake up to the situation. The prison officials report orders already received for 12,500,000 pounds, while the full output for this year is not expected to exceed 16,000,000 pounds.

Moorhead News: While at Washington the other day James J. Hill told "the boys" from Minnesota that unless they voted for free lumber there would be seven Populist congressmen from Minnesota next year. This is the kind of an argument that usually carries weight with Republican congressmen, especially when the man who says so knows what he is talking about.

Winona Republican Herald: The two big railroad men, Harriman and Hill, both see a silver lining back of the present clouds in the business world. Both say that with tariff agitation out of the way, things will pick up. As a matter of fact there is every indication of a return of "good times" as soon as the tariff question is settled, and our Washington dispatches indicate that this will not be long deferred.
